MERCURY MOUNTS OVER WEEK END

Typical March weather with mounting temperatures over the week end, spelled relief for citizens of the district from the colder weather of the days previous. Altho' a low of 17 above had been registered early in the morning on Sunday, a high of 52 had been marked at noon. On Monday a high of 53 and a low of 30 had been marked. Continuance or milder weather is forecast.

SEWER LATERALS BECOME BLOCKED

Merely routine work was occupying the attention of the department of public works employees on Monday, the main work being that of digging out private sewer laterals that had become blocked. This is the season, it is said, for more than ever. Through out the day the workers were kept busy shoveling the hills, streets and busy corners of the city, where a glass-like surface of ice on the streets hindered traffic.

MISSING DOG IS RETURNED

A wandering Chesapeake dog who made a brief but hearty Saturday from an owner that had recently purchased him, was picked up later in the day by Mr. Thos. Thorne, custodian of the pound, and returned to its owner. Through the city he was facilitated by the fact, that the hound is particularly known in this district, with only a few being seen in the city. Over the week end a diminutive Pomeranian dog, that had been severely mutilated by an auto, was killed, and as the result of a broken back. There are no dogs at present in the local pound.

NO FIRE CALLS OVER WEEKEND

No fire calls over the week-end was said to the fact that the softer weather that was experienced in the district since Saturday made the fire in local homes less bright-ly, letting down the percentage of danger points averaging higher in colder weather.

ONLY FEW DAYS MORE REQUIRED

In spite of the softness of the sky and the puddles of water on the surface, the ice in the bay was said to be safe for men to walk on. Motoring out on the ice on Saturday made the trip in less than half the time it took in many spots. Only a few more will be needed to finish the season's cutting.

HYMN SUNG IN MEMORY

Charles A. Kingston, Toronto, Composes Verses

A hymn composed by Charles A. Kingston of Toronto, in memory of his father, Charles Kingston, was sung for the first time on Sunday at a special service held at West Huntingdon Church, Rev. R. B. Armstrong Sales having charge of the service. The hymn was composed to hear the hymn sung for the first time. It was the first time the lyrics a piece of poetry was read by Mr. Charles A. Kingston on his boyhood days at West Huntingdon. The hymn and verse are herewith given:

A Hymn of Supplication

Dear Lord, who watchest over all our days,
Our Promise for the years to be,
That we might serve each other well
We pray in true sincerity.

Help us the love of sin to shun,
The light of love to lift on high,
And shew the wonders of Thy love
To pilgrims 'neath a darkened sky.

Help us the urge of Truth to feel,
The deadly blight of wrong to see,
That we Thy Truth may know
From Satan's thrall we shall be free.

Help us to be more pure in heart,
To seek Thy presence in our prayers,
And ever choose the better part
With Thee, Who every burden bears.

—George Allen Kingston.

Dedicated to the memory of the Author's Father, Charles Kingston, 1835-1913.

Seafowl Days at West Huntingdon
Is there such a river,
Speeding onward to the day
When it shoots the last swift rapids
To the depths of far away;
Best as our days are passing
Through the years that are to be,
The voice of old West Huntingdon
Will ever call to me.

I shall trail her winding streamlet
Where the little brook trout run,
And shall see her fertile upland
Lying golden in the sun.
I'll recall the old stone school house
Where we spent such happy days,
And the brick church near the corner
Where we learned to mend our ways.

I shall see the dear old farmstead—
The old home where I was born,
In that little old log cabin
On a far back concession,
But no matter where my lot is,
Till our course on earth be run,
I'll remember the days I spent In old West Huntingdon.

—George Allen Kingston.

COMMUNION ON HUFF'S ISLAND

For the first time in its history the congregation of The Good Shepherd on Huff's Island, had Holy Communion on the island on Sunday the 12th inst., in connection with Church, Belleville, officiating. The Communion service, which was attended by thirty persons of whom sixteen were male members, was celebrated in the school house which had been suitably arranged in the form of a chancel, with a small altar for the service. Rev. Wright officiated the service.

Though this is the first time this congregation has had communion service on the island, the congregation has been there for back forty or more years to the days of the late Canon Burke or St. Thomas Church, Belleville, who was then in charge. It was for many years a part of St. Thomas parish and the Huff's Island parishioners accordingly attended Divine service and Communion at St. Thomas' Latterly these Huff's Island parishioners have become part of the Belleville Mission. Other congregations associated with them are under the Rev. Gerald E. Graham, Deseronto, St. John's, Shrubsville Ave., Belleville and Carleton.

COMMUNION SERVICE

Mr. Graham asked the prayers of the Belleville congregation for the congregation of The Good Shepherd, to which he ministered; particularly as this was the first time of the celebration on the island. The Huff's Island parishioners now attending the Cannifton congregation being in the same situation.

ST. PATRICK AND MISSIONS

Rev. Dr. Bell Preaches on Great Figure of First Church

The world has never known a Christian who was not a missionary, little zeal than the Irish Church to the eleventh century and no greater missionary than St. Patrick, said Rev. Dr. R. B. Bell at Sunday evening.

Dr. Bell declared there was the St. Patrick of legend and the great historic figure and that the former great legend about any life is the best proof of the great-ness of the latter—accordingly he is true of all great leaders.

The Rector's sermon was not the legends which have gathered about him since such a traditional establishment of snakes from the Emerald Isle but of the sainted bishop, who was born in Scotland ca. 389 A.D., he said, by one, all Ireland heathen but left it a Christian country.

As to his birthplace, besides Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Brittany, England and Wales have made claim but the best of the evidences favors Scotland, though England put up a fairly od claim. He was taken captive by pirates and at six years he was held as a slave in Ireland and escaped to France. Entering the church he became a monk and then an bishop and was sent by the Pope to Ireland. Subject to strong religious emotions, he heard the voice of God in a dream as a slave made him a devoted lover of mankind. He was the first missionary zeal. His work spread beyond Ireland, into Scotland, Wales and over the Continent and he founded schools, universities and monasteries as in England he founded the university of Europe. This was a marvellous gift to the Irish people, they were a fertile soil for organizing genius and therefore he founded were the great schools of the day.

Dr. Bell spoke of his Confessions, which reveal his piety, his knowledge and his love of the Holy Scripture. Other literary works extanct are his letter of Corotic and his Rule of Life.

Dr. Bell drew three lessons from the life of the great saint. First, his belief in God in the days of his youth. He was intensely interested in God, with personal fellowship with Jesus Christ. Second, his passion for his fellowmen, so as he saw it was not a re-straint but a glorious unfolding of the possibilities of life according to God's plan. He was a marvellous example of prayer. He often, according to his own words prayed twenty times a day and as often at night in the mountains and often rose before the break of day to pray. Prayer was the secret of his life. Prayer to him was a high adventure, an escape from slavery. St. Patrick made use of the Word of God. He did not preach it as a textbook of theology but he took it as the Word of God for our days are passing. Through the years that are to be. The voice of old West Huntingdon Will ever call to me.

He contrasted the conditions before 1837 when any trivial matter had to be referred to the members of the Legislative Body, Lord Durham on his report of the causes of the Rebellion suggested that responsible government given and municipal government be added and it would relieve the legislative assembly of petty matters and give men in governmental activity. By the United Council Act in 1841 a council was elected and the warden was elected by the council. The assembly. The Municipal Act was passed in 1849 and provided for the city as it is to-day with the responsibility of looking after the municipal affairs, electing councillors and reeve. In towns or two municipalities, there is elected three councillors and reeve, in villages added according to population. County Council is made up of reeves and deputy reeves and a warden is elected from this number. The villages of 750 population have the number of representatives as the township.

The cities with a thousand population elect three councillors and each 500 population added. In the larger cities a Board of Control is elected by the Council from their own members. The Board of Education is elected and is under the direction of the Dept. of Education. Members have to see that all children from the ages of eight to sixteen years go to the free public and high schools and attend to all matters pertaining to the schools.

REALITY OF HELL IS TOLD

Old Time Revival Service at Alliance Tabernacle

Old time revival scenes were witnessed at the Alliance Tabernacle Sunday when after the closing night of the Evangelistic Campaign brought a full house and some standing. Mrs. Wallace who was formerly the Orr Evangelistic Co. while spoke on the subject "Is there a Hell," speaking with great power and force, forcefully unanswerable proof from the word of God to the fact of an Eternal Hell taking the teachings of Jesus and the writers of the Gospels showing the reality of the broad way to destruction and contrasting with the narrow way to life everlasting with Jesus Christ.

Mrs. Tabernacle was packed to capacity and the speaker held the congregation spellbound by her remarkable exposition and speaking in the power of the Holy Spirit. At the close of the service when the invitation was given numbers responded to the call and finding the Lord. The night was an inspiration, Work and Worship of the Spirit as was a visitation of the Spirit of God and thanking God for answered prayer.

At the morning service Rev. G. Wilbert gave a clear and masterly message on Bible Sanctification from the text in Thess. 5:23, 24, 4:13.

Only this is the will of God even your sanctification."

The model prayer for the believer and the joy of the Spirit filled His.

In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Wishart spoke on "Faith Versus Fear" and "The Rapture" showing the solemn truth of the Scriptures and the word of God and the current events of the day.

The Revival Services are being followed by cottage meetings on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday and young people on Wednesday, and the regular meetings on Thursday for Prayer and Bible Study on Thursday.

"Belleville needs revival both spiritual and temporal" said the Evangelist.

PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED CITIZENS of the Great Dominion of Canada, being a free and fredependent people, in whom reside the right of self determination, do hereby vigorously protest against the action of the Radio Commission of Canada in censoring or attempting to censor and exclude from Canadian broadcast radio listening on matters pertaining to the Bible and of public interest, and particularly the lectures of J. F. Rutherford, pertaining to divine prophecy, which have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, and that it was written, for the instruction of man. Many sincere persons who have the Bible prophecies very particularly to our day and bear direct relationship to the present world distress and clarion God's remedy for relief. We are entitled to hear these questions publicly discussed free from all censor, whether our present views are right or wrong. Those who object, or who may be offended by the truth, may turn their radio dials and decline to hear.

We therefore demand that the Dominion Parliament take immediate action requiring from the Radio Commission the power to censor, hinder or prevent any of the lectures and that the people be left free to determine what they will or will not hear. Men of world-wide repute and eminently qualified to speak on these matters we believe Rutherford is, can be heard, and we demand that our radio stations be permitted the publishing of the lectures. The question is, Shall the people continue to enjoy freedom or shall a few deprive them of their God-given rights?

EASTER FIXED FOR CLOSING

Budget Now Prepared: is Expected to be Tabled This Week

Ottawa, March 13—(CP)— If the budget comes down this week as is now expected parliament may be able to end its deliberations by Easter with the aid of a few weeks of intensive work. Interest at the moment centres in the terms of the budget, which is eagerly awaited.

The debt-moratorium has provided for some time and has been delayed, it is understood, because of possible repercussions in Canada of the tangled financial situation in the United States. Just how the terms of the Canadian budget might be modified as a result of developments south of the line is not fully clear except with respect to exchange.

The ultimate position of the United States dollar will be an important bearing on government financing in Canada, provincial as well as federal. Canada has large obligations in the United States payable in United States funds.

If after the financial tangle there is straightened out the United States dollar is on a par with or lower in value than the Canadian dollar it will be easier to meet those obligations. The Canadian dollar so far has been at a discount the exchange payments on governmental debts has been made yearly to the detriment of government.

Today the house of Commons will resume consideration of the railway legislation with the prospect of a speedy disposal of the bill. Announcement of the date of the budget may be made today.

NEW TYPE OF HEN WANTED

English Trade Wants Bird Not Four Pounds And Plump

Ottawa, March 13—(CP)— The Department of Agriculture is looking for a new type of hen. The beefy Plymouth Rock which combines great egg laying qualities with a plump and substantial body and his long been considered the popular fowl for the table, will not do. Neither will the sleek Leghorns, a breed which has abundant production of big eggs. The Rhode Island Reds and the various breeds of Wyandottes also fall to make the specifications.

When Canada went after a share of the poultry business of the United Kingdom it was found that Canadian chickens were too big. The preferential bonanza was for chickens that weighs 3 1-2 to 3 3-4 lbs. when killed and prepared for sale.

When W. A. Brown, head of the poultry division of the department went to England recently starting this question he was shown the type of birds the British housekeeper wants. They are small with plenty of white meat on them. He is bringing over some of the type and in the meantime chickens raised in Nova Scotia and British Columbia are seeking to develop such a strain by cross-breeding. The competition will probably spread over Canada.

What is wanted is a pullet that will weigh 2 1-2 lbs., before it is fattened that is plump and compact and will lay two-ounce eggs and plenty of them. Those are the specifications and officials of the poultry division are confident, that such a hen can be developed.

Russia has such chickens it is claimed, it is understood that while the birds now coming to Canada are from England, they are strain developed in Russia—red combs and all.

The gold will be replaced by currency issued to the banks by the Federal Reserve system.

Confidence and co-operation

Coupled with the announcement of the Secretary of the Treasury providing for the centralization of gold at Washington and for the reopening of all sound banks before Wednesday came the assurance of President Roosevelt that the United States had ended once and for all the "gold standard" failure.

In an address to the people, broadcast last night, the President called for a spirit of national confidence and co-operation, assured the public that "it was safer to keep your money in a reopened bank than under a mattress" and declared that every instrument which you use in dealing in the dollar is sound than on the day that it was made.

The new federal currency issue, the President told his hearers, was sound money, backed by sound collateral and able to be placed on a par equal status with any other money in circulation.

The reopening of the banks, the Secretary of the Treasury announced last night would be carried out under "integrated system." Today banks in 250 cities in the 12 Federal Reserve cities will resume operations, together with non-member banks at their discretion and subject to the restrictions laid down at Washington.

On Tuesday their numbers will be swelled by banking institutions in all cities which have clearing house associations, and on Wednesday by other banking institutions which are found to be in sound condition.

ROSLIN W. I. ENTERTAINS AT SOCIAL EVENING

Roslin, March 13—The Roslin W.I.F.A. held their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Irene Carleton, Thomasburg, on Monday evening, March 6th, with an attendance of about twenty ladies.

The meeting opened by singing "Forty Days and Forty Nights", followed by prayer by the Rector, Rev. P. C. Bosley. After the business had been concluding a social hour, arranged by the programme committee was enjoyed. Later a delicious lunch was served by the hostess assisted by several of the members. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Carleton for their kind hospitality.

The Roslin Women's Institute held a very successful progressive euchre party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. Silk on Wednesday evening. Thirteen tables being in play. Prize winners were Miss E. Kerr and Mrs. Roy White.

At the conclusion of the card games, suddenly and without warning the room which had been brightly illuminated with electric lights was plunged into darkness. A telephone call revealed the fact that the condition was general throughout the village. An effort was made to provide some other means of light, a lamp finally being found and made ready for use, furnished a dim illumination in the room. Fortunately the power was off for only a short time. No explanation of the interruption of the electric power was given.

Later a delicious lunch of sandwiches, cake and coffee was served by the ladies of the Institute.

This social evening took the place of the regular March meeting of the Institute.

The second of the series of lantern slide lectures on the "Man Nazareth Christ" was given in the Anglican Church on Wednesday evening.

LITTLE FRIENDS ENTERTAINED AT BIRTHDAY PARTY

West Huntingdon, March 13—One of the most serious storms of recent years visited the locality on Wednesday. There was no speeding on the front streets, and everyone had to watch their step. Phones were out of order on Thursday and Friday, but today the run is shining and the ice life depression and mostly all our troubles will soon pass away.

Among those who attended Mr. Meehan's auction sale of farm stock and implements on Tuesday at Melville Domian, Sandy McCurdy, Foster Wilson, Frank Cosby, Keith Bray, M. Reid, Geo. Bennett and A. Wilson. Some articles were sold by way vale, while others brought a fair price considering the times.

Mr. and Mrs Earl Fox of Centre visited at Mr. Geo McCurdy's on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs Douglas Albans and Robert and Isabelle of 2nd Thurlow spent Tuesday and Friday visiting at Mrs. Sarah and Mrs. Abe. Tarney.

Miss Joyce Wallace has been quite ill with a cold It will be remembered that Joyce was seriously ill with pneumonia part of the winter, and much anxiety was felt when she developed another cold, but she is gaining.

Mrs. J. Wilson spent a couple of days last week with Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Mc Cann of Madoc.

Mr. Henry Emerson is operating the mill, owned by his brother Tom and started sawing on Tuesday.

THE QUAKE.

The position of man in a holocaust,
A struggle between the powers of nature and his own frailties naturally attracts the attention of every human being. South
California's earthquake awakes sympathy from all parts of the world for the victims and for those who have to live through the trials and nerve-wracking experiences of a severe quake.

Fortunately Friday evening's temblor was not as severe as some which have befallen the Pacific Coast in the past. But it was heavy enough for many who lost their lives or relatives or their property and belongings.

Against the awfulness of the sight living way beneath one's feet, or the sight of roadways twisting before one's gaze, and buildings falling, with the terror of the hours of dark which followed, in fear lest worse quakes would come, there is only to be set the indomitable human heart.
The Long Beach disaster, as always happens, brought out the greatness of frail man, whose courage could not be conquered though the earth was yielding under his feet. Deeds of heroism were performed by men and women who did not know themselves of heroic mould, a sure proof that heroism is more general than even the brave allow.

Rehabilitation of the losses of property, the restoration of services which make city life what it is, and the heavy response by the people of the United States and by their president and the government are marks of the human appeal.

THE HEART OF A CHILD

A deed which shines through the gloom of a national banking collapse in the world's greatest republic and the quake disaster which cost many lives and thirty-five millions of property loss on the coast of Southern California, was performed a few days ago by a little girl of Ohio, who seeing the danger of her six-year-old sister, who had crawled to play beneath a train which was just ready to move, crawled in after her and shoved her to safety, only to lose several fingers on her own hand.

Here was pure unselfishness, sacrifice without thought of consequence. True, perhaps the little eight-year-old rescuer did not realize her danger though she sensed her sister's, but that is just the quality of love.

If a man ever felt that the world looked dark and that life was scarcely worth living, this story should prove to him that human life is worth while. The spirit of sacrifice is one of the proofs of the value of life.

Some adults could not, perhaps, rise to the greatness of such a moment without thinking the cost. But the demand at that moment was for instantaneous action —to delay and weigh consequences would have been too late. There was One who spoke of the soul and spirit of a little child as the only way to Heaven and nothing ever has been said by man to equal the truth of the word. This story of the little LeMaistre girl demonstrates that spirit.

Some day the little saver of her sister will know the cost, but she will not regret it. That maimed hand, when she becomes an adult, will be the highest badge of selfabnegation. The six-year sister does not know yet what it meant, but she will grow to realize that there was one, a child of years not unlike who would have given her life if need be for her. She cannot but then realize the devotion of her sister Betty.

The story has gone across a continent. It is no wonder that the Canadian broadcasting station, CKGW, has paid the little rescuer signal honor and has called all admirers of the brave little miss to send her messages of greetings to cheer her as she wends her recovery of the use of the poor maimed little hand.

MUNICIPAL RELIEF

Mayors of more than twenty of the largest cities in northern England, includ-ing Manchester, are protesting against the cost of public relief falling so largely upon the municipalities, says the Montreal Gaz-ette. The local taxes rates are already in excess of $1 shillings on the pound and it is felt that the relief costs should be spread over the whole country. The pro-testing municipal bodies seem to have reason behind their case, and no doubt fair consideration will be given to their rep-resentations. In a way, the situation re-sembles that in Canada, where provincial and federal governments have been forced by circumstances to share in the expense. It is a difficult problem on both sides of the ocean.

HER HANDS

Sometimes I wonder if she understands,
The lady with the lovely, idle hands!
Their slenderness, their pallid hues contrast
In startling background for her rubies' fire.
They are so swift, so graceful pouring tea,
Like birds they flutter when they wave at me;
At bridge they are all eagerness, so gay,
So filled with triumph when she wins at play.
Like Beauty's own, her hands that never fight
One deed that sprang from any kindly thought,
That never lent their supple strength to Another's burden, trouble or despair.

MORE THAN 200,000 boys are now on the roads, wandering from state to state due to inability to get work, lack of funds for further education, too much pride to live off the "home folks" in these trying times and many other causes.

What are we going to do about it?
Suggestions are offered by A. Wayne Mc-Millan in an article in the Rotarian Magazine.

"Civic groups, service clubs and groups interested in boys' must be rallied to the present an increase in the ranks of the wandering thousands," insists Mr. Mc-Millen. "Boys should be urged to stay in schools as long as schools have courses to occupy them. They should be told in advance that the depression is general thruout the country and that there will be no job for anyone anywhere when they go.

"They should be informed that they will seldom be allowed to stay in a town long enough even to look for a job, but will be pushed to move endlessly and aimlessly on, picking up a precarious living along the way. They should hear these facts not only from social workers, but from business leaders, for whom they have an instinctive boyish respect.

"Local groups," he suggests, "can also exert their influence to see that existing community resources are used to the limit in an effort to provide boys with means of employing their leisure. The school, park and recreation boards are under stress these days to cut their budgets. Any such cut which reduces the opportunities for boys to use the boys profitable engaged will be dearly paid for in the end. Trade courses should be made available wherever possible for the boys leaving the 8A grade as a definite trade will enable them to compete more successfully."

COFFEE OUTPUT of 1922 totalled 34,000,000 bags, but a surplus of ten million bags which the market failed to absorb. Brazil is the great coffee raising country and the attempt of the Brazilian coffee magnates but this only as-sisted growers in other countries to market their coffee at good prices. Africa has become an important coffee producer, also Ceylon, Java and Sumatra. It is said that the use of coffee can be traced back to the banquet hall of King Solomon. Current history tells us that a fall in a definite trade will enable them to compete more successfully."

New Dominion Stores Executive

MORLEY SMITH

Morley Smith, the new President of Dominion Stores Limited, comes from the Canadian countryside. His career furnishes another of the many examples where boys from rural Ontario communities have gradually but surely forged ahead to positions of high responsibility in the business world.

He was born at Curries, five miles south of Woodstock, in Oxford County, and received his early education in a country school and at Woodstock Collegiate Institute, but on completing his high school education he turned to school teaching as a means of getting money to enable him to attend University. Commencing to teach at the age of seventeen, he was for six years a successful school teacher, during the last five years in the same school at Oxford Centre, Ontario. He then entered Toronto University, registering at Victoria College.

Mr. Smith had a very brilliant University course. He was one of three students to obtain first class honours in the General Course in his first year. Transferring to the Honour Course of Political Science, he was the First Alexander Mac-Kenzie Scholarship in his second year, the Second Alexander Mac-Kenzie Scholarship in his third year, and graduated first in his course in his final year, receiving the F. W. Wills Gold Medal from Toronto University, and a special Gold Medal from Victoria University. He took an active part in various college sports and obtained his "W" for soccer football, his capabilities for leadership showed themselves in college days as is evidenced by his having at different times during his course been President of the Year Committee, an institution well known to all Victoria graduates; President of the Political Science Club; Secretary for Toronto University in Inter-University debate, and Editor of the college magazine. In his final year at Victoria he held the Chancellor Prize awarded by elimination vote of the entire class by the member considered to be the best all round man of his year.

After graduating from University, Mr. Smith went on to Cascade Hall and for two years acted as its Head Master

35TH TREMOR RECORDED IN LOS ANGELES

Estimated Dead 125 And Damage of 40 Millions of Dollars

10 UNIDENTIFIED

Week-end of Terror Leaves Southern Counties in Desolation

LOS ANGELES, March 13—(AP)—After a week-end of terror shattered Southern California cities counted the loss of life from a devastating series of earthquakes at approximately 118 and property damage near the $40,000,000 mark.

As agencies of reconstruction were set in motion, fear was largely dissipated through the growing infrequency of the earth shocks. Between 4 a.m. Sunday, when the 35th major disturbance occurred, and an early hour today, only one tremor of more than passing intensity was felt. It came at 8.32 p.m., yesterday (E.S.T.) and added nothing to the widespread wreckage.

Threads of confusion still weaved through the work of rescue squads, centering principally among the injured. Official estimates there were about 1,000 in hospitals and 4,000 others probably received emergency treatment. Nearly a score of persons were listed as missing.

In the line of the 35 shocks, only which have not been explored searchers believed the bodies lay and they considered it likely the final toll of the earthquake would be about 125 lives.

Only Unidentified

Although the unidentified dead had been reduced by approximately 10, the addresses or a considerably larger group, of the names of their relatives, had not been learned.

Particularly among the injured was this true because of the vast army of medical treatment necessary to relieve their suffering.

The element of doubt put an additional strain upon relief workers in the form of countless inquiries from distant relatives concerning the safety of their kin. These pour-ed in through telephone and telegraph channels.

Officials believed the press of medical attention would be past late today and they would be able to turn their efforts toward computing accurate information about sufferers.

Three principal plans to bring about a quick start reconstruction were in the hands of engineers and governing bodies today.

In Long Beach, where the catastrophe reached its apex, claiming approximately 83 lives and working havoc to property estimated at $25,000,000, a State Emergency meeting at 11 a.m. to hear the needs of surrounding communities with a view to obtaining liberalization of rules on the use of Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds.

Take Up Loan Question

Under the charter of the Board of the Corporation, funds for the relief of a disaster may not be made available.

In Los Angeles, the Directors of the Chamber of Commerce indicated they would take up discussion of legislation to revise the Finance Corporation.

A ray of hope that the seriousness of the disaster would not be increased by the spread of disease was seen as the second full day passed since the tremendous convulsions on Friday night without the presence of epidemics.

Dr. J. L. Pomeroy, County Health Officer, organized 126 bacteriological squads of five each and sent them into every devastated area. Streams for sanitary hookups, water, dairy supplies and ground waters were tested and 200 relief stations were set up in central areas.

Despite the breadth of the damaged area a sense of orderliness prevailed. Looting in the absence of attempted looting was marked, only one instance having been made in the Long Beach district. The rapid mobilization of the State's semi-military groups, led by 10,000 bluecoated men of the United States fleet, contributed to the maintenance of order.

"AFTER THE BALL" SHOWS SCENES OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS

"After The Ball" opening at the Capitol Theatre today is proof that the film industry has finally grown up.

In the past the screen has been criticised as not appealing sufficiently to adult intelligences, but the type of entertainment provided by Leading Man and Director Lee Garrison is pleasing to men and women of discriminating taste and mature taste. Milton Rosmer, the brilliant English director of "After The Ball" is hailed as another Lubitsch in the fashioning of sophisticated comedy.

The screen has given the world the finest possible course in dramatic training. The average theatre-goer sees two or more pictures every week with the result that each person becomes an embryo writer, actor or director. With so many qualified critics to cater to, the producer is now in a position to broaden the scope of his endeavors.

"I heartily disagree", states Mr. Rosmer, who thus who believe that pictures must appeal to the twelve year old mind. I feel that we in England are producing entertainment for a more intelligent and discerning audience.

"After the Ball" at Capitol Theatre is a gay, gorgeous and glamorous production, cleverly set to music. The story is new and audacious but is so cleverly written and acted that the most fastidious haven't been able to object. The acting is superb, with Basil Rathbone, George Grossmith, Monte Burke and Gwen Ffrangcon Davies.

The European song hit "A Fight A While A Tune" introduced in "After The Ball" is one of the catchiest melodies heard here in some time.

Today is dinnerware gift for ladies.

LAST SHOCK AT 5.18 TODAY

Described as Being Pretty Heavy at San Pedro

Los Angeles March 13—(AP)—A fairly strong earthquake was felt here at 5.18 a.m. today, the shock came a few moments after Long Beach Uten, 43, of Los Angeles, the 1184th victim listed at the General Hospital. Uten was injured last Friday night when bricks showered down from a building here knocked him from the cab of the truck of an automobile, which struck him.

The tremor was of sufficient violence in Long Beach to awaken sleeping residents. In San Pedro, it was described as "pretty heavy" and Long Beach officials that "it was about as strong as some of the 30 since the original one on Friday."

A preliminary survey failed to reveal additional damage.

SUNNIEST WEEKEND SINCE AUGUST ENJOYED

"Chaos Parades" in Hyde Park —Lord Baldwin

London, March 13 (CP, Cable)—England has just enjoyed the sunniest week-end of the winter, a fortnight ago the country was shivering from the worst blizzard and snowstorm for many years but yesterday spring burst out in full force and brought everybody out of doors.

For the so-called "church parade" in Hyde Park, where the best of fashion may be seen, the sun dissolved the overcoats and the women were wearing only light wraps.

Crocuses and other harbingers of summer are blooming radiantly in the parks and at the famous Hampton Court palace.

H. H. GILDERSLEEVE DIES IN OTTAWA

Founder of Lake Ontario and Bay of Quinte Navigation Co.

Ottawa, March 13 (CP) — Henry H. Gildersleeve, former manager of the Northern Navigation Company and later of the Canada Steamship Lines was dead here today. Prior to his retirement a few years ago he was a prominent figure in navigation circles on the Great Lakes. He died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Victor E. Rivers after a lengthy illness and was 68 years ago.

Born in Kingston, Ont., Mr. Gildersleeve was the last surviving member of a direct line of three generations of Gildersleeves dating back to Long Island, England. His predecessors were trusted Empire Loyalists and settled in Prescott County after the American revolution.

His grandfather operated the first steamboat on Canada soil and was the founder of the Lake Ontario and Bay of Quinte Navigation Company.

POPE PRESIDES AT CONSISTORY

One Canadian, Quebec Archbishop is Made Cardinal

VATICAN CITY, March 13—(AP)—Pope Pius presided today over a consistory for the first time in nearly three years and created six new cardinals, one a Canadian. They are:

Jean Marie Rodrigue Villeneuve, Archbishop of Quebec.

Pietro Fumasoni-Biondi, until now Apostolic delegate at Washington.

Augustin Hlond, Archbishop of Apostolic Nuncio to Rumania.

Theodor Innitzer, Archbishop of Vienna, Austria.

Elia Dalla Costa, Archbishop of Florence.

Francesco Fossati, Archbishop of Turin.

In recommending creation of the new cardinals, the Pontiff described them as "the six most distinguished men" and, until now, the son of diplomatic legations abroad or by diligent administration of their episcopal charge, have greatly recommended themselves to us as worthy of being incorporated into the College of Cardinals."

Referring to the two additional cardinals to be appointed in the future, about whom he kept secret, he called them "two other distinguished men."

Three to Open Doors

In this first consistory, one of the most colorful ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church, the Pontiff also nominated three cardinals to open the sacred doors at three Rome Basilicas at the same time, that he inaugurates the Holy Year; also to close the holy door of St. Peter's. They are:

Cardinal Basilio Pompilj, Vicar for St. Paul's Basilica.

Cardinal Marchetti-Selvaggiani for St. John Lateran.

Cardinal Granito, who for eight years was auditor of the Apostolic Delegation at Washington for St. Mary Major.

The Pope also nominated two additional officials to be created at a future consistory. Their names were reserved until they are published as long as they are not created cardinals.

The Pope did not make the nominations of about 20 new bishops and archbishops as originally scheduled for today. They were postponed until the consistory Thursday, following a public consistory on the same day.

It also was announced the new Chancellor of the Church will be Cardinal Pio Boggiani, succeeding Cardinal Frubwirth, who died in February.

The Pope approved the canonization of Andre Fournet, founder of the order of the Daughters of the Cross.

The consistory today was secret. The only persons attending were the Pope and some 30 cardinals. The new wearers of the purple remained in their various residences awaiting the arrival of messengers to tell them officially of their elevation.

K. O. Make-up O. K.

by Maurice N. H. Tessler

Joycosky, Huntley Hamilton burst into his apartment. Gaily he threw himself upon a bath. Then he saw the letter postmarked Boston. He stopped short.—Gingerly, arch-backed like a cat, he approached it. The ultra-smart backhand. He felt suddenly faint. Even before he opened it, he knew.

All day long Huntley Hamilton had felt that something was going to happen. As sure as this Hollywood sun was shining. As sure as the name was Hamilton—his real name, that is. Something was bound to happen: Director Alexis LaPierre had walked onto the studio stage that morning wearing his Quartier Latin beret and that cursed Alle-grem scarf. LaPierre, with his satirical tidbreaks, was Bill's only superstition.

Nothing had happened all day. So at five-thirty, when LaPierre dismissed the company, Bill had dashed to the phone in his dressing room—his new, his first, his dream room.

"Mr. Goldbergh's office!" he heard the familiar Brooklynese, and then someone told him no. Miss Cotton's gone yet, then Bill's world stood still, then—then—The World Wonderful's Voice in The World said "Hello".

"This Miss Lissa Cotton of Brill-ston Drive? This is Bill Hamilton's office. We understand you're serving your famous ham and petties tonight and we'd like to send one home.

A warm low laugh rippled out of the receiver and, delightfully, Lissa's voice, the hallowing Voice, Actor Crashes Home of Rose's Sweetheart and Sells Hamburg! The phone number.....

Tentative call toward the studio gate. Bill took a rapid inventory. The ring. Right here in his vest pocket. The exhilarating taxi. The speech! Right on his tongue-tip, rehearsed letter-perfect. The girl! Ah-h-h, The Girl.....

He strolled across the sound-stage. "Hey!" he yelled. "Where's a honestop? I wanna shoot from—Oh!—Mr. Goldbergh—" It was the Director head himself.

The ophidian old eyes of Jake Goldbergh twinkled elfishly. The boss' head inclined slowly, as got a date with my Lissa. Well, sure, she might not have the it, y'understand, for a little star, but for Mrs. Huntley Hamilton—" he nodded approvingly. "—Errant! Perkins ("Huntley Hamilton' was Jake's idea—Jake didn't know Bill was one of the Boston Perkinses) grinned, squeezed the producer's hand and scrammed.

Out onto the Boulevard on two wheels. Then, dizzily, home, home, he relaxed, and thought about Lissa, and wondered what people ever saw in those elaborately tantalizing females whom Goldbergh starred. In fact, he thought, what had he himself, back in Boston, seen in Marjorie Prouty whom he had thought he'd married over.

Soon after Marjorie's coming out, Bill had proposed—for the eleventh time—and she had said yes and packed him off. At least, she'd made it plain that she meant to have her year of fun before settling down. Bill would go out and—oh, do something, so the society page could say something besides "Harvard, class of 1926".

So Bill took the Dramatic Club's press clippings to Hollywood and became assistant extra at seventy-five per day and Marjorie's letters became shorter and fewer and more casual and finally stopped. And Bill refrained from committing suicide and studied diction instead and played small bits and the Lissa Cotton and at once began to suspect. And the evening he blushed—literally blushed in the ears—when his surprise call found her in a gingham house dress, he knew. HE KNEW! And now he had—his first big role in MIDNIGHT! and he had the ring in his pocket and Lissa was making him a sandwich and Bill wasn't in a glorious world and—

Then Bill snapped back into apartment, to find a letter from Marjorie, to find himself thinking somehow, of LaPierre's scarf as he opened it. Then his world promptly went black. His head dropped, with a sickening thud, into the pit of his stomach. Stupefied, dazed, he read again.....

"I am sorry, if you've had enough play-acting, you can come and claim your little Marjorie. We're leaving right on the heels of this note. All the old crowd's coming. Harriet's wired ahead to Santa Monica to have her place ready. I know you don't like her, Billy, but please.....for my sake?....." Good boy! See you soon!

P. S. I'm glad you're announcing part funk you. I've told them all.

P. P. S. Remember, dear, to avoid mind.....

Bill slumped weakly into a chair .....Idiotic fool that he'd been!.....What if her letters had been so vague? What if she hadn't written for nearly half a year? In that gang of hers, that sort of easy casualness was the smartest sense of good form.....After all he had proposed, hadn't he? And she had accepted him, hadn't she ....He grooned.

Bill never spent a more wretched evening. The bungalow on Hillside Drive had never been cozier; Lissa had never been lovelier; her mother had never been more charming. Dinner was delightful afterward. But most of the parties remained unexplained, the question unposed, and the ring unproduced. Bill left early. Lissa said he didn't look well.

The next day was a nightmare. All the flavor of Hollywood here cred over the "Derelict" set. Director Jake's chest fell off and folds in perfect scenes; scripts got lost; microphones went dead; Lissa's cues got all in a smack.

And LaPierre was in one of his best moods. He harassed Bill. First it was Bill's makeup. Then it was Bill's voice. Then it was the man himself. Bill's attitude. "Bill, you're a drunken derelict, beaten by life, drifting! Can't you get in it?"

Bill smiled crookedly but remained silent. He was drifting, drifting to the bath.

At half past four LaPierre called a five-minute conference and dismissed the principals. Bill shuffled listlessly to his dressing room.....

Presently he roused himself from a deep reverie sindy, got up, and looked at his watch. It was after five. Dully he lit a cigarette and sat down on the foot of his cot and across the Boulevard to Lissa.

Bill slouched into a seat. At the next table a group of young cowboys, cops, Cossacks and Foreign Legionnaires were raising a rollicking row. Bill scowled. He slumped lower in his chair, and stared absently at the floor.

Then it happened. So suddenly that he hardly realized it, Bill threw and stood there. Through the doorway there entered, in the order named:

(1) A voice. Accordially patriotic. "Yankee Doodle" and "Auld Lang Syne".

(2) A scent. Some sort of Frenchy Nuit. He knew it at once.

(3) A hand. Pulsating with life and vitality, which stamps the theatrical product of Hollywood from all others.

(4) The owner of (1), (2), and (3), Miss Marjorie Prouty, ravishing, superbly Nordic, and very very Boston.

Bill's brain reeled.

Bill found himself on his feet, hastily pushing the scolded chair, shaking a cool limp hand.

"Why, Marjorie!" he was saying in a queer breathless pant. Then, "Well!" she repeated. She seemed unaccountably nervous, and was looking around, apparently desperately searching for words. "Why, Marjorie!" he said, "I didn't now do you like Hollywood, any-how?" Then, more carefully.

"Well, well!" said Bill, loudly hearty. He was vaguely aware of the cowboys, cops, Cossacks and Legionnaires staring at this variety show; of an aura faintly hostile, of Jake Goldbergh's voice, "Bill-time!" He tried to fasten his attention on Marjorie; her eyes were almost furtive manner; on her eyes that flittered from corner to corner as if in search for prop behind her. Instead he found his ears shrieking forward that phrase. He caught a subdued twitter.....a murmured phrase..."terrible success"...then another titter, louder.....

Breathing his poise he half turned to them, the proper smile, the well-bred words on his lips. He stopped dead. He was facing a display of a derelict sitting back.

As from a distance he heard Marjorie's cool, "Do you mind?" His saw.he was still holding her hand. His stared at her face. Expert revulsion was written there now.

"Well, glad to have met you," she tossed back from the doorway.

Indistinctly he stumbled out. Inarticulately his gaze followed her. A big car halted beside him He turned to face Jake Goldbergh's critical scrutiny.

"Bulls, Derelict," hailed Jake. "Say, what's LaPierre kickin' about your wardrobe? He shouted Bill thoughtfully. "S'm. Got a good beard there. But: that black eye ain't so convincing. And then .....Hm.....hm.....

Slowly Bill's brain cleared, his eyes widened. He ran inside to a mirror. Then, with a wild whoop, he was out and dashing up the Boulevard.

"Hey, maniac!" Goldbergh's bur called after him. "Where you going?"

"Hillside Drive!" without pausing.

"Jump in!"

"Thanks!" the shout came back through flying hair, "but I can't be delayed!"

Beauty . . . . By Helen Jameson

Eating For Beauty's Sake

For her dietetic sins a woman pays in beauty ills. For every indiscretion she is blessed with a healthy, normal appetite, there is half a dozen who don't care what they eat, or whether they eat at all. Since the good complexion is dependent upon proper nourishment, and blood streams that carry on the work of distributing groceries to every cell of the body, it stands to reason that the beauty seeker should give thought to the serious business of stoking up her digestive furnaces.

The first step is to create normal appetite. Appetite is a matter to all sorts of influences. Worry and discontent destroy it. If you're a good fretter you're not likely to be a good eater. Women who spend hours of their time in the kitchen, seeing, handling, smelling foods get finicky. They're satisfied to taste it away from the family circle now and then, but they're not fond of some other cook's creating.

Business girls, on their own, eating in cafeterias, lunching hastily and that's not surprising. A meal should be a social diversion; good company makes good taste better; the one makes the party 'dish,' any fun. This sort of thing mustn't go on. The poorly nourished body is one that becomes a victim of a disturbed nervous system. A lot of jittery, long-faced women, who think the world has turned against them could part up if somebody made them mind eating rules and regulations.

If the human system isn't properly supplied with groceries, all manner of unpleasant disturbances take place. The complexion loses resiliency, soft under padding get flaccid, wrinkles result. It's easier and cheaper to down three spoonfuls of cod liver oil than to correct the ravages of undernourishment by means of beautifying treatments and cosmetics.

Half meals cause food elements so do teeth and finger nails. Every portion of the body, every cell and every drop of blood, is dependent upon nutrition.

One bad practice is failure to seek change of diet. There should be a small variety of food at each meal, but viands should change from day to day. Food should look attractive, be well cooked. Don't be an ass; every woman should be interested in attaining a certain degree of efficiency in this interesting business.

To diet deficiency is laid many complexion ills. Acne, the curse of the skin, excessive redness, blackheads, premature wrinkles, pores that under the eyes though of course other conditions may contribute to these beauty ills. Let the finicky eater take inventory, look herself over. Let her reform, make eating a business, something to be planned out and thought about. She may see a change in the reflection in the mirror. Very soon, too.

The girl with impaired appetite needs fresh air and exercise. A bit of hard labor, may put her on her toes. Like washing windows or scrubbing pantry floors. A mental outlook makes for a useful eagerness to line up at the festive board.

Eat and be sweet. Eat and be beautiful.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman
Chairman of Thanks

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I have received a wedding gift from my husband's firm. Will you please help me as you have helped so many others, and show me how to acknowledge this gift, a beautiful piece of silver?

Please advise me a way to thank them.

2. Also, please, what sort of a letter should I send to friends or relatives of my husband's who have sent me gifts?

G.

1. I'd like to have you write an individual note to each of the members of the firm if the card was signed so that you could be sure that you know the contributions of the gift. If that is impossible send your note to the name of the person to whom name this gift was sent, or to the president of the company if the envi read "from the company." The note would read somewhat like this:

Dear Mr. Robinson:

May I thank you and you and each you if you will be so kind as to pass on my thanks due to the other members of your company for their kindness and generous hospitality (use the wording my husband and me such a beautiful wedding present) I deeply appreciate your goodness and your friendliness.

The silver bowl is a beauty, a masterpiece of loveliness and usefulness, and we shall have much joy in using it in our new home. We are already planning the many uses to which its design will be put, and every time we use it we shall be thanking you again for your kind thought.

All good wishes from us both, and again our high thanks.

Very sincerely yours,
Martha Smith Brown.

(Mrs. John Brown)

The notes of thanks to your friends and relatives are written in much the same way—that is, first to thank the kind thought that prompted the sending of the gift, and then on to the beauty, design and usefulness of the gift, and your plans for its use. Of course it is naturally the lone of informality depends on your relationship or friendship to the person to whom you are writing.

Out of Place

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been considered bad taste for one to use perfume during office hours? I am very fond of perfume, and have used a good quality sparingly at all times. Recently I was in one of the beauty shops overheard one of the clients say that she could "smell finger nails" were as out of place in an office as perfume. I felt rather "cheap" for a bit worried since wondering if I have been using it. Should I gratefully accept your opinion in this matter.

D.

The woman whom you overheard had good judgment about this matter. It is thoroughly out of place to use perfume in a business office, even partially in the evening hours of duty. And it is thoroughly out of place to use finger nails filed for nails in an office. The test of this sort of thing is the unobtrusive, and both are conspicuous, one to the nose and one to the eyes.

Introductions

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Lately I was in a public hall with a friend. He introduced me to a friend of his. I did not like the man and I stood up to greet him.

After that my friend told me that I made a mistake, that a woman should not stand up when introduced to a man. I always did it before. Kindly tell me if he is right.

Also please tell me what question is your column, and what you would or the know as soon as you can.

Susie.

It's true that a woman doesn't rise when a man is introduced to her. (And by the way, notice that the word—and a man is introduced to a woman, not a woman to a man. Your friends 'man friend was introduced to you' not 'you were introduced to your friend.') Present Mr. Hall," or "Miss Allen, Mr. Hall.")

(Copyright 1933, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

A FIRM STAND

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Very often I am placed in an embarrassing position and feel so ashamed that I do not return to it.

I live out of town and have to take a bus and train to work. Almost daily, coming or going, I meet some of the same people, and single men, on the bus. Very often they pay my fare. I try sometimes to pay it but they refuse to take it from me. They get off. Some men pay casual acquaintances. I think it's a waste time arguing about it or take the fare from me. They do it as though it were the only thing to do.

Other ladies do it in a go-'tail fashion, as though the fare is a trifling ine, and some men, I know, do it with an air that says that money is very scarce to them in these times.

I make a fine salary the fare means absolutely nothing to me. In fact it is too small to be calculated in my budget. So anyone paying my fare is not doing me a favor financially, but they put me in an embarrassing position.

Why can't I meet the men, talk casually to them as is the case, and then get up and pay my own fare, being under no obligation to anyone? I've made believe I haven't seen an acquaintance, to avoid the usual small-time discussion afterwards of who is to pay. I try very absolutely "no" in a firm manner and insist on paying my own ticket, but I feel like a mannish woman, one who would be the man, of the family were I married.

What do other girls do under these circumstances?

You've answered so many intelligent questions in your columns that I feel your decision worthy of following.

A Commuter

Since this is a circumstance that will "go on and on," if you don't take a definite stand about it, and stop you want to take a definite stand about it. Accept no more fares. Refuse to take this definite stand at once. Don't sound as if this could be good very grudgingly, but of course I don't mean it in this way. I mean because that is going to be your stand at the same time definite, so that the man will get the point in a hurry. Say that will still . . . get the point. No 'wobbling' will do!

All of these co-commuters . . . and the types that you so interestingly set forth seem to be all-inclusive . . . say, "Please, Mr. Allen, it is much rather pay my own fare, if you don't mind." I find, as a matter of fact, that very often they do. Under circumstances as this, that "if you don't mind" is a mere matter of form. If it is said graciously, it has a way of putting the courtesy-of-dating back-courtesy directly to the other person, and the latter is quite apt to respond. Of course it can be said in a very unpleasant way, and it is best to look cold in print, but it needn't be either. It can be "gracious and regret impressive" . . . Try it.

M.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it correct for the groom wear at a church wedding? He is wearing a tuxedo.

2 When going to a hotel, does the groom register for both?

M.

1 There is only one tie appropriate with a Tuxedo, and it is black bow tie. The white bow tie is appropriate only with formal evening clothes, the "tail-coat."

2 They follow the bellboy together to the elevator. The man, in the elevator, the man stands aside to let the lady enter first. And, as they reach their floor, again he stands aside to allow her to go first from the elevator.

3 The bride-to-be, the guest of honor, receives the gifts at the showers, and receive the guests with the bridegroom.

4 Yes. He signs!

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Adams, Morristown, New Jersey.

SIGNATURES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

In signing cards or letters, is it correct to sign Jack and Jill or Jill and Jack? Does the man's name go before the man's or vice versa?

S.

Although we usually feel that the person writing the letter or card should sign it first, the custom in this case is to sign the woman's name first, even if she is the writer of the signature.

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on good manners submitted by readers.

"Ugly Duckling" Girls May Turn Out Glorious Swans

If you are a young man and in general think rather well of yourself, don't imagine a girl has no taste because she happens to like you.

Doubtless you know your own dark and seamy side, but the girl you have singled out for her delighting bonds was not so prolific as to be versed in the book of fate.

Eventually he met the ugly-duckling girl of the state university days, and he was aghast at the change in her. She had come to become a knockout. She had acquired poise, and had learned to talk well and amusingly in the most beautiful of speaking voices. In college she had been awkward and sloppy as to dress. Now her clothes had a flair, were perfectly fitting and had pulled a rather dull and earnest husband along with her.

Out Of the Beauty Box

There's a movement afoot to make feminine feet contented. Shoe manufacturers are making offerings this season that are more than overlooked, shoes with ample room for space, beside of comfort and smart and trimmed with a girl stumps. Going on spiked heels her ankles waver, natural movement is impeded the framework of the body is thrown out of alignment. No woman can carry herself properly when she is walking on her toes, certainly not with comfort. Wear your sensibles on the street, think you indulge in frivolous footwear when the merry evening comes along. But don't walk on stilts all the time, not fair to yourself as all and tough on feet.

NO NEW ORDER ON EXCHANGE

Institutions Here Work on Same Regulations

No new developments in international exchange or trade has been reported by say in this city on Monday. Trade and exchange of currency between the United States and Canada has not been reported and no further orders by banks, the post office of clearing houses had been received.

"We are working on the same regulations as received last week and there has been no change" declared Mr. J. F. G. Thrasher, Toronto manager on Monday morning. "No postal orders to the States are yet being sent," he added.

At the local customs office no material increase in business has been reported, and the same assessment of duty on goods that have been being carried on.

At the offices of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National telegraph and express, the same officials declared the same orders still held, "No exchange with the States is yet being carried out."

Many shop keepers and grocers in the city, have been receiving a considerable amount of American money at par, are holding it as a speculation. A few of them have been offering it at a five per cent premium on the money. Such money is believed to have come from private savings of local residents, who had contemplated a trip to the States later during the coming summer.

Bank of Montreal reported no exchange, or transactions with the American side as yet, and no new orders have been received.

Questions regarding the free trading of American currency and Canadian money between U. S. and Canadian western cities at the border

Oct., Mr. E. V. Illery, of the Canadian bank of commerce declared the dealing to be "purely speculative."

"We are not faced with the same conditions here," declared Mr. Illery, "when exchange was at some 3 limited amount of American currency, it has been limited, as it is required to carry on trade in this district, and no orders have been made for it. In Windsor, for example, the transient business and unprofessional clearances rates may go up or they may go down. Those would be by barring and holding the amount that currency are taking that business."

Advice given by Mr. Illery to those now in touch with United States funds is that they keep it and wait for conditions to return to normal. If a merchant still exists on American currency, those who have handled it will be assured of the legal amount.

For the present, those who have been sending money to the United States are depending on currency in registered letter.

WHEAT TURNS DOWNWARDS

Early Buyers Desert Wheat Pit And Prices Sag

Winnipeg, March 13.—(CP)—Early buyers deserted the wheat pit today and prices, after showing considerable fractional advances, turned downward in early trading on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Covering the midsession period values had nothing steady with all futures at even 1-4 cent lower. May at 54, July 51 1-4 and October 51 3-4.

The usual buying support from Chicago accounted for the rise at the opening with some purchases also reported for commission house traders.

As the session progressed, however traders lost interest and offerings increased, the latter being sales came into the pit and accelerated the decline.

Winnipeg cash wheat held steady throughout and near the close were unchanged to 1-4d higher. Domestic prices at noon were 1-4 cent lower.

World wheat shipments for the week approximated 18,000,000 bushels. Nearly 8,540,000 bushels of this were of North American origin. Supplies available to Europe increased 3,500,000 bushels.

NAZIS FIRMLY ENTRENCHED

Wholesale Turnover of Municipal And Commercial Office Holders

Berlin, March 13 (AP)—Chancellor Hitler's Nazis and their allies, the Nationalists, were more firmly entrenched in power than ever today after a wholesale turnover of municipal and communal offices in Prussia completing two-thirds of Germany.

The Socialist and Communist parties, whose chief strength has been in Prussia, the German capital, of the nation's largest state, suffered even greater losses than in the national election of March 5, the decisions of a week ago.

The Nationalist parties not only won an overwhelming majority of 200,000 town and district offices but, through them, complete control of the Prussian Diet through the Landtag.

And "Red Berlin"—the boast of Communists for several years—became an ardent phrase in fact. The capital voted over to the Nazis and Nationalists, with the latter making their biggest gains in this city.

The red, black and gold flag, which has been the emblem of the German republic for 14 years, also became extinct today as the national colors of Prussia, ordered by President Von Hindenburg, the old Prussian flag of red and white and red flag again becomes the official colors.

Meanwhile Chancellor Hitler announced his party's swastika banner would be flown alongside the Imperial flag on all public buildings here. Nov. 9 and March 21 are to be wave in celebration of the Nazi revolution.

Julian Puhn, New York musician, and Miss Rose Rosenberg, Toronto, V. medical student, were victims of assault by Nazis or persons wearing brown shirts, it was learned. It was learned yesterday. A Nazi leader kicked Miss Rosenberg and attacked by men demanding money. Rosenberg assaulted when passing a department store with a package, was told by police they could not interfere with Nazis.

Yesterday's voting automatically will remove Otto Braun, Socialist, as Prussian state's council president, and will give the new government control of the Trimvirate, which in turn, controls the Prussian Diet. The elections were called last month by Chancellor Hitler, a member of the Trimvirate, the Nazi Diet, president, Hans Kerrl.

Detroit, Rangers and Boston Do Not Better Positions in N.H.L. Games Over Weekend

All Three Teams Win Some of them by Large Scores

BILL COOK STARS

Creates New Season Record For Tallying Goals

Toronto, March 13—Bunched in the race to the wire, relative positions of Detroit, Boston and Rangers were unchanged today as the three leaders turned in victories in two-game hockey games in their struggle for first place in the National Hockey League's American section. Americans, in third position, were struggling valiantly on the Capital ice today in a 5-1 overtime victory.

Boston Bruins scraped some 13,000 Toronto supporters with their speed and clever combination when they trounced Maple Leafs 5-2, the same score by which Montreal Maroons defeated Chicago in another Saturday game. Detroit kept pace with Rangers and Boston by winning a hard-fought game from Canadiens Sunday 3-1.

Bruins 56 Hour Tie

Detroit Red Wings broke the 56-hour tie with Boston for group leadership with a third period rally that saw Herbie Lewis scores single handed on a dazzling solo. Johnny Gallagher made one of it with another goal with the aid of Johnny Sorrell and Conny Smith. The teams entered the third period tied 1-1. Happy Shuma accounted for the only goal in the first period on a play by Frank Carson and Mike Goodfellow only to have Fi Lepine even it up.

Bill Cook's amazing display of marksmanship provided the feature in the New York Sunday game. He scored one in the first period on Ching Johnson's pass and figured in all five of Ranger's third period goals, scoring the first himself, then aiding Doug Brennan and Frank Boucher "peg" goals before Cook scored two more just Roy Worters, Ching Johnson and Ott Heller so combined for the other two Ranger goals.

Lloyd Klein sandwiched an American goal between Cook's first and Brennan's and Eddie Rozinski got the other one in the third period. Besides shooting the winning goal of the second period Johnson aided in two others and played a great game defensively.

Second Machine Clicks

Smooth combination of Boston clicked to perfection as Toronto as Joe Lamb and Dit Clapper tallied three goals, each of them on passes from Nels Stewart. Marty Barry accounted for two, while the greatest of all defense men, Eddie Shore, scored one himself and aided in two others counted by Marty Barry, Max Bell and Hec Kilrea who also earned assists.

Both Toronto goals were scored when Shore was on the penalty bench and the Leafs caught Boston "Thompson" Bill Cowley Chezz scored the first with Bill Thoma, Harvey Jackson and Hap Day drawing assists. Charlie Conacher accounted for the second with Ace Orsche's pass.

Bert Gardiner scored the two goals that beat American at Ottawa Saturday. Neither team got a play a second period had that was wiped out in the third when Johnny Shepherd shot in Montreal's winner a play with Norm Rimes and Nick Wasnie. His assist was the two minutes before the overtime ended after Cye Hower had scored the tying Montreal hits.

Hooley Smith was the big gun as Montreal as Maroons walloped Chicago. The flashy centre whipped in the first goal in the second period after Glen Brydson had scored in the first. Two goals each by Hooley Cy Wentworth accounted for the remaining Maroon markers, Art Rommes and Roger Jenkins accounted for the Chicago goals.

3 MORE TEAMS BITE THE DUST

Championship Trail is a Long And Hard One

(By The Canadian Press)

Three more teams have fallen by the casualties today in the fight to reach Allan Cup playdowns and their championship series in the next stage in the long grind for Canada's amateur hockey supremacy.

Finalists for the Quebec title were settled Sunday when Montreal Wanderers vanquished Montreal Nationals in the second of a two-game final and took the round 8-5 on the series. The Wanderers, champions of the province last season, meet Quebec Crystals, victors over Montreal Shamrocks in intermediate play by a 3-1 total score for the right to travel to the Maritimes to defend their competition.

Out in the prairies, Saskatoon Quakers won the Big Prairie Ace Series Saturday night 3-2 after a scoreless first game in the two-game total-goals senior championship. They take on Ice-landers, Manitoba senior champions, in the first of a two-game series tonight.

Alberta's smart junior champions, Calgary Jimmies, today were in Regina prepared to battle with the Ratchemen's junior champions for the Dominion-wide Memorial Cup play. Calgary entered the second round by defeating the junior British Columbia's best Saturday night. They took the round from Trail Juniors 5-3, will meet Regina Saturday.

In the east Montreal Royals had a two-game winning the Quebec championship from Grace A.A.A. 13-4 in a two game series and will mark time until Truro and Moncton decide, which will take on the Royals on Wednesday, March 22, as Memorial Cup aspirants.

Winnipeg Monarchs gained a two-goal advantage to take into their second game with Fort Rendor as a result of their 3-1 win Saturday night.

Hartford Midgets and Newmarket senior hostilities for the Ontario Hockey Association title tomorrow night after winding up the round in a two-of-three series tied 2-3 in 30 minutes overtime Saturday. Newmarket won the first game and to win tomorrow night will throw them against Sudbury Wolves, Memorial cup champions.

Knocks and Boosts

Congratulations B.C.I. senior girls' basketball team is surely sweet.

After being nosed out in the provincial finals by one point last year the B.C.I. girl cagers made sure of their berth this year by emphatically over all opposition to win the senior basketball crown of the girls' basketball in C.O.S.S.A. circles. After withdrawing from Queen Elizabeth Park Friday evening second and beat the fast Burlington hussies by the score of 46 to 22 in the second game of the day in Toronto. Miss Beale, the coach, is to be congratulated as she worked hard and long to give the girls the best training and every player on the team excelled, according to press dispatches from Toronto.

It is understood the locals are quick sanctions to enter the provincial finals to be staged in Toronto about the end of this month. As it stands the team is financially embarrassed but it is hoped the necessary money to finance the scheme will be forthcoming. Credit is due to credit to the school and the city. With a sure-fire provincial winner in our midst the question of finances should be overlooked and settled in their favor as soon as possible.

The B.C.I. junior boys hockey team although they took 2 to 1 decision over the locals of the Tweed kids, managed to win the Bay of Quinte series on the round by taking the 5 to 2 win at Tweed, winning the opening 4 to 3. As there are no junior hockey groups in the C.O.S.S.A. there will be no more hockey for them this year. The B.C.I. juniors were eliminated in the first round by worthy champions—they met only the eventual winners. The Belleville kids stepped into the local Arena and swept the B.C.I. senior to a one-sided affair. Manager Neal has gathered together a smart team and is to be commended on winning the group. Whether they will continue on in the hockey ranks of the C.O.S.S.A. is quite doubtful.

Two players sloed out in a snappy senior O.H.A. hockey game at Junction game, Reeves, the 15 year old next guardian for Tweed, gave an exhibition of goal tending that was a treat to watch; he has a future in store for him. Weber, brilliant star of the locals, was perhaps the best player on the ice. When the visitors were staging their final bid in the third period, this lad was a stonewall, handed stayed off what looked like sure defeat.

Getting back to basketball, the exploits of the C.C.I. girl team including Ada Gartley, Eugenia May, Esther Mancell, Annie Crab, Marian MacLean, Sally Gallinan, Betty Sherwin, Jean Blaker and Mary Wallbridge played champion-ship basketball for their coach. The 46-22 victory defeat was something of an upset.

Up in Oshawa they are staging a post-season hockey game with the proceeds to go towards the hiring of a rink, likely this Spring, next season. It is along the same lines that the Belleville and District Hockey League was organized. The features of the Belleville Arena depends considerably on the attendance at these post-season games so by dropping prices considerably at these games and by hie or her share towards the assurance of the opening of the Belleville Arena next season. According to what information we can receive Mr. Hume is more than pleased with the response and he hopes this season next in order to wind up a perfect season of which he is justly proud that the fans will turn out in large number for the final games of hockey this year.

After all the appeal is not one of charity as tonight's Cobourg vs. Campbellford game will be a good, or better, than the majority of intermediate games next season. Each club has strengthened to a marked degree for this post-season league, thus the fans will be able to enjoy a better class of hockey.

It seems that Cobourg C.O.B.I. club has had a record idea to not only stimulate the interest in basketball in Cobourg but also to add to the strength of the Peaks as an intermediate team. Under the supervision of the senior basketball committee in that town, which is a five-wire setup, a town basketball league is to be formed with four teams competing. The winners will carry rosterfull players on their rosters, thus giving a revenue basketball aspirants in the town a chance to learn the game. As they progress those youngsters will be drafted into the ranks of the C.O.B.I. team. Along the line of improvements in sports Reeve Shaw Park where the local kids play is to be floodlit so it will be completely overhauled and put into first class playing condition.

It looks as though the local juveniles in the Spalding Hockey League, Trenton Juvenile Hockey League, have a tough schedule on their hands to keep pace with the Kingston team. They face the Kingston team on Monday night and have left to play after that time a game Wednesday and a game in Gananoque. The Limestone kids have played in the league only 2 to 6 over the week end, thus getting them was game ahead of the locals. The Kingston juniors have played one more game, but it looks like Manager Bill Spalding will have to win at three of their remaining games to finish on top of the heap.

Collegiate Hockey Teams Win and Lose Their Games

Juniors Win Round From Tweed 6-4 While Seniors Lose

MARMORA'S ROUND

Resting on their three goal lead, the Belleville Collegiate Juniors were thought they were defeated by the score of 3 to 1 on Saturday night at the Belleville Arena, managed to squeeze out a 6 to 4 win on the round over the Tweed H.S. kids this winning the Bay of Quinte group of the O.S.S.A., hockey championship, while the senior B.C.I. proteges could but play the fast Marmora H.S. team a one all tie thus losing the round to the Northerners by the score of 5 to 5. The juniors entered the final game three goals to the good and although the Tweed kids put up a masterful attempt to overcome the 3 goal lead they missed their mark and Les Shiels' kids annexed the junior championship of the C.O.S.S.A., while the Marmora seniors will continue onward towards the senior champion-ship of the C.O.S.S.A.

McBrath Stands Out

During the opening game, in which the local juniors won the round, two players stood out throughout in "Steve" McBrath for the Belleville C.I., and Jack Reeves, the 15 year old net custodian for the Tweed team. Both of these players excelled themselves throughout and carried the bulk of their team's work. McBrath was unquestionably the best and most polished player on the ice and his solo rush resulting in a tally in the final period, practically put the game out of reach from defeat. Reeves, on the other hand, tended a very smart game and thwarted all and sundry efforts of the locals, with the exception of McBrath's goal in the final stanza.

The visitors displayed a fair brand of combination throughout and only their inability to shoot let the Belleville kids down.

Greatest Playmaker in History of World Hockey

(This is the fourth of a series on players chosen for the Canadian Press all-star National Hockey League team.)

New York, March 13 (CP)—One of the greatest, if not hockey's greatest playmaker over a period of years, is Frank Boucher, 31-year-old centre of New York Rangers who has been chosen for the first time pivot on the Canadian Press National League all-star sextette.

Born in the cradle of hockey—Ottawa—Frank early showed his liking for the sport's most exacting efficiency for a member of the famous Rideau Canoe Club family. After playing junior and then senior amateur hockey with New Edinburgh and of the Ottawa City League he migrated west for further amateur experience.

He turned professional with Ottawa Senators in the 1921-22 season but it was not until he was transferred to the Vancouver Millionaires the next winter that he began to show the sparkling ability to lay down, opportune, goal-making passes in his wings that has finally brought him recognition from sports pens and amateurs.

Boucher played four seasons with the Millionaires before joining the Rangers, who had been trying to get the Ottawa brothers and form the famous Cook-Boucher-Cook line.

In his professional career with Ottawa, Vancouver and Rangers, Frankie had notched 761 goals and been credited with an identical number of assists in league tilts for an all 11 year total of 322 points. In Stanley Cup playoffs, and, incidentally he has missed them only three times, he has accounted for 44 goals and 31 assists.

Frankie thinks Bill and Bun Cook are the brainiest pair of wings he has ever worked with. "Check" Gardiner, the smiling Chicago Black Hawks goalkeeper, is his idea of the perfect netman.

Boucher, who is married and has one son, likes baseball for off-season relaxation, playing against mates of the Babe voting "aye."

Marmora seniors will continue onward towards the senior champion-ship of the C.O.S.S.A.

NO HOPE TO BEAT RECORD

Victor Smith, 10 Hours Ahead of Record Now Believed Lost

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, March 13.—(CP Cable)—An aerial race for Victor Smith, youthful flight, record-seeker, was under way today as fears grew he was lost. The 18-year-old airman was last seen soon after Abraham's Greenwich time (seven p.m., Sunday, E.S.T.) flying over Abrandfontein Kay 320 miles north of Cape Town.

Smith's hopes of breaking Amy Johnson Mollison's England-Cape record appeared to have died, but second justified a few hours pop-louisy —were ended today with his failure to arrive here by dawn. The flyer was ten hours ahead of Mrs. Mollison's schedule, when he left Waffals Bay, South West Africa last night.

One pilot left here with instructions to search the coast minutely as far north as Alexander Bay. Two planes and pilots left with extra supplies of gasoline.

Friends that Smith was in trouble near Vredenburg and had landed there safely proved unfounded. The aeroplane described as Smith's was a local one, from Cape Town.

Airport officials feared the young aviator might have run out of fuel.

LONDON TECUMSEHS WIN LEAGUE TITLE

Defeat Syracuse 1-0 in Last Game There

Syracuse, N.Y., March 13—Having been responsible for some unorthodox moves this winter, the International Hockey League have slipped in another with which to finish off the season's schedule. In the final scheduled London-Syracuse clash at Syracuse last night, no officials appeared so the teams delegated a player each for the job, Russ Bell, Syracuse, and Mike Neville, London, drawing the assignment. London won 1-0 and copped first place in the standings.

Syracuse also figured in another unusual feature recently in the title race game with Buffalo, their goal "Jumping Benny" Grant became so disheartened trying to stop a shower of pucks showered at him, Coach Conacher ordered to enable him to recover his wind.

"SERVICE"

By F. Denham

"Well we all thinks," Mis Case, she's a sailor, all's been through the mill, thanks to serve at some shindig—and I'll bound you was not one bit behind." Mrs. Peake's face was all a-glow with beaming compassion, for her visitor's slanting eyes betrayed the fine shades of feeling toward this diminutive, red-eyed little woman. Mrs. Peake's own eyes rivaled the sea's in moisture.

"Yes, indeed, Mrs. Peake, Judith is that sweet to pa and Alfred the same. They've been so good to us during this trip for us, especially here in Quebec."

"Mr. Peake broke in "Come in—I mean, why don't you—they never get a chance to say and that is if some women folks don't get in the way and keep the kind of a pa to me that you've been to yours. Why, I'm sure I don't know what I would be any better. Why, I was just a baby to Mis Case here when my mother died, and pa was all I had. Course I had a good mother-in-law, but I was never much on fol-de-rol and fixin's, and I'm sure pa was glad enough for you to steer for her when she was courting. I'll bet you thought you could have enough sweet to cook she comes over and has you in tears."

"Now, now, Mrs. Peake, that is just what I'm like my pa, that's why when she was a little kid she'd say, 'Daddy, don't you dare tell neighbor.' I just must be a softie—talking 'bout sentimental—I'm sure you to know that it's only you for your own good that I am so firm. I think it's time we got a-bed and that she don't care nobody, but I'm sure you'll excuse me about you."

Judith turned her head wearily in her chair—picked up her embroidery—a pair of pillow cases for Jo—and went on.

"Oh! Why did Mrs. Peake have to come in—I'm sure I'm ashamed as she pushed the needle in and out of the linen. I was absorbed in the shading and beauty of the pattern—I'm sure I'm not like you—you are old and just a little bit queer, that's it! Now you're getting sleepy all right, you have plenty to eat, and plenty to wear and a roof over your head and then there is that hundred dollars—that started a-drawing interest—I'm going to draw out of Willie's bank tomorrow and start on that trip for you—your old heart's set on it."

"Thoughts of the trip made Ella's tired old eyes water and her face work with emotion. Judith forgot, in her fear of your open mother that everybody will be changed a bit—it's been so long since I left them to marry Jack—widowed with two children—my folks opposed it on account of the child's race and religion—I'm a regular outcast—but Judith stepped in. "All alone, Ella!"

"Ye, dear, I'm alone—come in—sit down, your pa's not a-going to be long—I'm just some for the night—I'm sorry I'm not in bed now. Monday's Will's birthday—Judith, you're so hurriedly, I'm afraid you'll go in bed and get the money for I want to be surprised in the morning. I've been that hundred of yours for a few days, you don't mind putting off the trip for a few days?"

Ella sighed. "Why no, honey, I reckon not—I'm not in the hurry I was—I'll be over soon. It's been twenty years and I reckon a few days won't make any."—Her voice broke.

Judith turned her head wearily in her chair—picked up her embroidery—a pair of pillow cases for Jo—and went on.

"Oh! Why did Mrs. Peake have to come in—I'm sure I'm ashamed as she pushed the needle in and out of the linen. I was absorbed in the shading and beauty of the pattern—I'm sure I'm not like you—you are old and just a little bit queer, that's it! SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

Their table was ready when they returned to it. A waiter, a white man and in uniform, then began. "Did you notice those people who spoke to me? The women looks familiar."

"The one with the big comb? Who was they?"

"Friends of Mr. Sanborn's, one time in an oil operation down Ocklahoma, she's his wife, and Sanborn told me how they met. I'd like to tell you."

"Why?"

"It's an interesting story, to me at least. She isn't Spanish at all. She's an Omega girl."

"A-what?"

"An Omega Indian girl, from his own estate. She had known him as a child. The Omegas are rich, she had been educated at an Eastern college. I've spoken of it as 'she,' a real love match, I considered: it is quite extraordinary."

"In which way?" Alesma queried.

"Because so many people have such shrewd neutral prejudices."

"Bosh!"

"Now you know! Would you marry an—Indian, a man of another race?"

"I was engaged to one—so an Indian, and he was just as fine, of course, but he was a dandy fellow and he wasn't very dark. I could not stand a dark face. You have the strangest ideas, Dana. I could help marrying any man I was engaged for, I'm thoroughly spoiled, thank Heaven! There aren't many decent people of our class, I'd marry him—nobody else would."

CHAPTER NINETEEN

"They danced again when the music started and each felt some change in the other. A new vitality or some element of excitement had come into Sam and Alesma thrilled to it; her body responded to his touch and her breath beat hotly upon his cheek. As if by mutual consent they ceased dancing at the end of the cabin reserved the open air and sauntered out upon the portion that overlooked the sea. Together they descended the wide marble steps. These gardens are a feature, and the lovely lawns, the Avenue of Palms, Paradis Casino, for there French and Italian influence has reached its perfection. Beyond them and running parallel with the Bay is the handsome Avenue of the Cypresses, equally well advertised on account of postcards. At the avenue of stately trees was doubtless laid out as it is divided by a wide parkway that affords an enchanting view of the harbor, especially at night, when the lights are reflected in the water and the moon is high and there is a soothing and seeing those sentimentally inclined. Building have increased in height.

Here Sam and Alesma found themselves without knowing which one had led the other. As a matter of fact, neither had led, their feet had shown them the way. For a moment they had paused out of the flight and into the glorious moonlight and faced each other as if at some unspoken signal. Each saw the other dimly and yet with a revealing distinctness.

He held her in his arms, he was crushing her to him and twisting her lips with his own, Alesma was overpowered him and the girl responded with a fierce, nerve-wracking abandonment that was as close as ink. It was exhilaration for both, and one at last, too; a sudden bursting of all constraint, an explosive shattering of inhibition, and the ecstasy of it was keener than a knife thrust. Inhibitions, those unconscious forces that triumph words are weak symbols for emotion stored up through all the very processes of thought.

Voices sounded presently from somewhere but these Sam nor Alesma noticed them. They were entranced; they sat a while on a convenient bench, they rose and moved on, almost aimlessly through the shadows, absorbed in each other. Time passed, it grew dark in the garden and they then and ever darker here, and they realized that the hours had been turned off, but the stars remained. The moon had risen, it was a night to end any ago.

"A thousand times I've dreamed about holding you like this," Sam murmured. "I seem to experience feelings I've always known." He was profoundly interested in this phenomenon, however, though absorbed constantly, every night I've fallen asleep thinking of you, voices. It was like the music of some strange old instrument that stirs in the moonlight. You breathed the fragrance of your hair and it was like sweet-scented honeysuckle."

"That's father's soap," Alesma told him. "The other taste."

"It's mine if I had money and I told you—"

"Don't tell me anything, darling. What does it matter? What does anything matter? Tonight. I'm not my daughter. I'm the girl that you love, and you're the man that I love. Why ruin these few moments? Let's forget the past." She shivered. "You remember, Sam, the sleeping Princess who is still rubbing her eyes. You should have kissed her sooner—it wouldn't make any difference."

"Thank Heaven, I'm no lawyer. I don't say I have as much as your father has, or even more. Some day at least—"

"I'm sorry you told me that. I don't want you to be anything but what you are, Sam. I'm the sleeping Princess who is still rubbing her eyes. You should have kissed me sooner—it wouldn't make any difference."

"SIGN OF THE CROSS" GREAT SPECTACLE GREAT LOVE STORY

"The Sign of the Cross," which opens a four days' engagement commencing tomorrow at the Regent, is something more than an inspiring spectacle. More than that it is a story of the fact that Cecil B. DeMille, master of things of great dramatic value, has the story's dress and bend a hand to his will, and produces a film of even greater stature than in the past. It is further proof of DeMille's unchallenged accomplishment of a spectacular nature, wherein he has become peerless as he is in Hoster's Cross Mantegna or in the modern mechanical marvels of the Tower of the film's strong story, moreover, has been developed around a group of beautiful and talented cast. Fredric March portrays as the Roman patrician, Marcus Superbus, who loves a Christian girl. Elissa Landi is lovely as the Christian, Mercia; Claudette Colbert surpasses her past efforts as Poppaea, the wicked Empress Poppaea; Charles Laughton is to make Nero live; Ian Keith is Vitellius Tobin, Ian Keith, Joyzelle, Arthur Hohl, Harry Beresford, Arthur Hohl, Nat Pendleton, Clarence Burton, Richard Alexander, William V. Mong, Tommy Conlon, and Rosamo Purcell. All are excellent in supporting roles.

"The Sign of the Cross" is a great religious story, a great love story and a great spectacle. No matter what your taste in entertainment, you cannot fail to enjoy it.

Coming Attractions

"The Kiss" is a section," which opened to huge audiences as the Rialto on Saturday, is attracting record to-day excelling in humor, humanity and human interest. Those who failed to see it on Saturday should be made so memorable in "The Millionaire."

The excellent support includes Mrs. George Arliss, Marjorie Gateson, Ivan Simpson, Dan Wolheim, Patricia Ellis, O. P. Heggie, Douglas Gerrard, Ethel Wales, Grace Phillips, Charles Evans and Maude Leslie.

Next week is Wallace Beery in his best. Don't fail to see him tonight in "The King's Vacation."

ton to even the count.

The second game in which the B.O.T. seniors opened three goals ahead on a typical Intermediate struggle with aggressive aplenty to the fore. Ball controlled for the two odd fans to avail themselves of the pastime of Referee O'Neil for the winning club, was about the best threat to be made by either boards by Manager Blake Weal with stopmons and Gallery also playing good hockey and a good deal of it. Gallery's two tallies were both from the hitters played much better than in the previous session but they'd'd for the junkers but the situation was too far gone for them. Lee worked at a much better advantage than did Lee Marmont and Jack Hagerty for Orawa and Allan while Wether wowed himself with a couple of goals for Orawa. Both goal tenders, Calsery and Simpson, were unsubdued saves throughout.

Marmont on Top.

No score was in evidence in the initial frame, with Marmont getting the best of a solo effort, opened the scoring in the second period. When the final frame rolled around Coach Shula moved four men forward and Calsery and Green, considerable work until Dan Lee took a pass from Jack Green and Gallery and belped the twine behind Calsery. Referee Brown and Marmont duplicated the combination that Lee set Shula and after the play had been worked at centre ice Lee decided, that no goal should be counted which resulted in he and Referee Bill Sherry going into a conference with the ultimate result that the counter was allowed and the game ended in a one all tie Marmont scoring winning round to the City and Rural Areas Tied up by Difficulty of Motoring

MANY CARS DITCHED

Trucks Delayed Many Hours Behind Regular Schedules

With traffic almost paralyzed on highways in every direction, and thousands caused by the slippery coating of ice that covered the roads most early last evening, traffic was once more beginning to move late Tuesday, hours after the storm began.

In nearly all towns between Belleville, Toronto and Kingston, numbers of trucks stood waiting for the glazed windshields to thaw, and the roads to become a little less glassy under the light, intermittent rain.

Between Brighton and Belleville, three key highways were closed or reported to have ebb completely off the road into the ditch. One truck driver complained that he had been stalled for a total of between four and five hours during the early morning until a larger truck could pull him out.

Area Extended

A traveller who arrived at the city from Napanee to Belleville early on Tuesday morning, with a set of chains on his car, stated that he had arrived exhausted and with arms numb from gripping the wheel, as the car itself seemed bound to slide off the road at every hill.

He reported dozens of trucks in difficulties along the route from Napanee to Belleville, a few of them with their skids in the ditch, with crews busily engaged in getting them out again or the road.

Delivery trucks which make the daily early morning run to interior municipalities from Belleville and Toronto, reported getting through only with great difficulty, and the loss of from one to four hours of their schedule.

Belleville-Madoc bus, although handicapped by the slippery hills, managed to serve its Belleville shut most on time.

Bus Runs on Time

Amelia's Tweed bus also reported on time, although the route from Belleville to Tweed was reported to be cleared to be in a very poor condition. The local Tweed-Toronto bus, Tweed conditions were much better.

Railroads did not report any extensive trouble with freight or passenger movement.

Bus service from Belleville to Peterboro was temporarily suspended, until conditions improve. According to

BOY SKATES LONG WAY TO SCHOOL HOUSE

Lonely youth, undismayed by the icy walks all through the city that have claimed their victims by the score, and their elders, on Thursday morning, displayed a willingness to take advantage of the situation in various ways.

One boy, with the prospect of a long walk ahead of him from his home to the school, resurrected his skates and proceeded to skate the Dawsonville roadway, down the centre of the road, stopping them on the walks, and then skated to school on the walks. A larger youth, was also observed sliding to work on a sharp piece of glass which skipped over the walks.

The numbers included a duet by Dorothy and Anna McMahon, "Echoes of Erin," a vocal solo "Mother Of Mine" by Gladys Pearl, accompanied by Bernadette Shea, a violin solo by Dorothy Neal" by L. Paul, accompanied by Dorothy Morgan, "The Dead Did Not Die in Vain", by Donald Whelan and a chorus "Irish Eyes".

The debaters were introduced by the president, Mrs. F. W. Fitzgerald, who announced that the subject of the debate was "Resolved that Movie Pictures Are Essential". The affirmative side was taken by Albert St. Denis, John Perdue, Gerald Doran who advanced clever arguments to support their side of the question. The negative side was presented by Neil Harris, John McMahon and Harold Davidson their numbers being logical and well delivered. The judges were: Mrs. Thomas Friary, Mrs. W. J. Doyle and Mrs. T. H. McGillicuddy. In the absence of the decision of the judges, Mrs. Mc-Gillicuddy announced the decision of the debaters and said that the negative side had been adjudged the winner.

St. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, V.G. who was present at the meeting commended the debaters for their excellent speeches. In a brief address, Monsignor Nicholson recalled the many special feast days of the week, March 17th St. Patrick's day and March 19th, the feast of St. Joseph.

In the business discussion that followed the programme, Mrs. D. W. Doyle was appointed as a representative of the League to the Victorian Order of Nurses' committee.

Alberta's production of crude petroleum in 1932 totalled 917,823 barrels.

MEMBERS SPEAK OF CLUB'S WORK

Ed Buchanan, Norm Edwards and George Pauley Speakers

"International Education" was the subject upon which the members of the local Y's Men's Club heard short addresses relative to International Y's Men's activities, by three of their members last evening at the weekly luncheon in Y's Men's Club. Buchanan, secretary, Norm Edwards and Geo. Pauley, four presidents of the club were the speakers.

Ed. Buchanan spoke at length on "Y's Men's Club and Y's Men, while Norm Edward spoke on International relations. Past President Pauley in opening his address stated emphatically, "I am inclined to believe that John Erskine's book shows everything else at present time in the light of propaganda." Speaking of the movement—that idealism being expressed in service, it is not what we get out of life, but what we put into it. Many examples by the end, which is active, personal and unified effort in the direction of progress of the Y.M.C.A.

The speaker went on to state, that the local club would be well advised to take up the fullest possible extent of the experiences of the Y's Men's Club of Toronto. The club of Toronto was more than the meeting of the members, but was essentially a unified service in the community. The three major activities of the club were the work among young men's work and work among boys. The speaker when stressing the point of the importance of fellowship, stated that existing fellow Y's Men in Toronto.

During the evening in which President Court Miller occupied the Chair, there were fifteen Y's Men members with two visitors.

Ed. Buchanan and chairman Harry Poole reported, that the club's annual Y's Men's Dance will be held on Friday night and was expected to be the marked success of previous Y's Men's dances in this city. All final arrangements for the evening's entertainment have been completed and a large attendance crowd of the season is anticipated.

PATRON SAINT IS HONORED

Address on Life of St. Patrick by Mgr. Nicholson

St. Patrick, patron saint of Ireland, whose birthday is celebrated the world over on March 17th, was honored by Belleville Roman Catholics at the regular meeting of the Catholic Women's League in the parish house last evening when Monsignor Nicholson, who presides over the local parish, gave a lecture on St. Patrick's life and work. A brief sketch of the life of the great preacher was given by the Pope, his service overseas as a missionary, his return to the nation to the soldiers, which won for him the name of Coe, his return from the battlefields of Europe and his appointment as the head of the Irish Catholic parish. A feature of the gathering was the fact, that after the meeting had been opened with prayer by Monsignor Nicholson, Rosary was recited by the Reverend Father Lanigan Church, the city.

For more than one thousand years Irishmen the world over have paid tribute to the life and works of Ireland's patron saint, St. Patrick, which in the opinion of the speaker, evidenced the great love for the people as a saint and a man had upon all his compatriots. In most interesting manner, the speaker told of the early life of St. Patrick, placing the probable place of his birth in Northumberland, near the mouth of the river Severn, rather than in the France, as generally believed, as has been variously ascribed to him. He was born into a family of a kind of gintern, sale as a slave in Ireland, six years servitude in mental life seemed to have finally his life of service in bringing the light of Christianity to the people to make the corner stone of civilization in Ireland.

Sketches Celtic Invasion

Briefly sketching the Celtic invasion which swept Europe then overflowed into Ireland, Monsignor Nicholson, from that period about 400 B.C. when the Celtic races were driven from Europe by the Romans, had obtained a higher state of civilization than the nations of Europe existed in vaved invasions which revealed scenes of horsemanship, the speaker traced their effect upon Ireland and Irishmen the world over. The name of Scotia was given to Ireland by the Gaels, who were brought them the harpies, it is said—made them a present of a harp, and the harp has never discovered the joke, remarked the speaker in whimsical manner.

Celts Nature Lovers

The Celts were a blending of many virtues brought by the various races after centuries of assimilation, the Celts from Europe who came to Ireland remained to love and live, finding the beautiful green isle a fitting abode for lovers of nature. They were nature lovers with lofty thoughts and sentiments, reverence for life for nature and the sun for light and power, which thoughts were later expanded in the beautiful surroundings of Ireland and which appealed to practically all these lofty thoughts and desires even lofty thoughts and desires even lofty knowledge and greatness and St. Patrick brought Christianity to the Irish people as the corner stone of civilization, which had existed, but which was not based upon Christian law, but he surrounded them fearing that they would not persecute him. He slept often on the bare stones and often went hungry but he was determined to win their hearts and conquered the Irish Kings by his courage building a fire before the castle of the King, in defiance of the King's royal order. He faced the King without a cower, and conquered him that he was greater than the King, and was greater though uncrowned.

Tender Hearted Man

St. Patrick was saintly among the saints, but most human among men, and was tender hearted among the tenderest of men.

ALCOHOL IN GASOLINE

In many countries alcohol in gasoline for motor fuel is used, so they today in the agitation to let the Congress pass a law enforcing the use of a percentage of alcohol made from grain or wood in all motor fuel sold is not new in the sense of a new suggestion. In Europe, according to the Literary Digest there are many places where alcohol is used.

There is one drawback, according to authorities cited by the Digest—that is, to starting, wherein gasoline is said to be preferable.

One can see how there would be a considerable amount of benefit to the farmer provided alcohol is produced at a reasonable rate as it will mean the consumption of a large amount of grain. On the other hand companies will probably protest that this action will hazard their industry which is already controlling production.

One claim is made that a ten per cent. use of alcohol speeds up the car and gives greater mileage, diminishes carbon, and is anti-knock.

If the United States decides to make a law compelling the use of ten per cent. alcohol in all internal combustion engines, the alcohol to come from surplus United States corn and other grain, the position of Canada as an importer of gasoline will be interesting. Doubtless Canada, if mixing is profitable, would prefer to perform its own mixing, and handle the farmers if possible by the use of Canadian alcohol.

MORE THAN NINE DAYS' WONDER

President Roosevelt continues to hold the lion's share of the public stage. He is more than a nine days' wonder for he brings ideas and a practical mind to bear upon problems. His country is endorsing him and he bids fair to become one of the most popular figures in the world of men today.

Those who heard his short address by radio on Sunday night realize the unpretentiousness of the man, who could speak so that the least educated of his people might understand. This is just what the people want in office, a man they can understand, and who speaks so that they can understand. There was no effort at rhetorical oratory, but plain thoughts expressed in a simple and understandable style. There has been preparing that speech for the public, they would have been so thoughtful of the impression they were going to make of themselves on others that they would have loaded down their words with phrases which might as well be left out. Mr. Roosevelt had an aim and his words were plain.

And those who look upon the newly inaugurated chief see in the beginning of his efforts a diplomacy above board and freed from many of the tricks of the professional politician. They will grow in friendliness to the front and enthrone it as the ideal.

The president has had to face unexpected events in his early days and these have found him taking a manly measure of them. So far he has given evidence of the great gifts which his people know he possesses.

He has shown executive ability and strength—he has shown he relies upon himself whom he has taken into his confidence. His message reads not like the messages of other men who share here and there his responsibility a attitude which often seems insincere, but in Mr. Roosevelt there is none of this—the open nature of his mind and the sincerity of activities so far have been very encouraging to the people of his country and to others. He has shown evidence that he is not an imitator. So much can be expected to do and to say just along a certain line, but it may be expected from Roosevelt that he will do and say things which is distinctive and yet is a perfect reflection of himself.

PRAYER FOR "OUR NEIGHBORS"

How problems which face men and nations make them more and more understood one of another is to be seen in the flemonstration of the unity of issues to be faced. In the prayer for all sorts and conditions of men" in the ritual of the Church of England in Canada, on Sunday petition was made for the guidance of "our neighbors to be united" in the crisis thru which they are passing.

Such petitions for guidance have farflung results for not one worshipper but had a thought instilled in his or her mind and heart at that petition for the welfare of another country. Such prayers with those spiritual influences which should permeate the people of two countries.

Such a prayer creates a unity of outlook upon the problems which are to be treated in the light of those Christian qualities which make for national and international greatness. If all nations could look upon the world with such an attitude, international tangles would easily be solved.

BRIDE TO HUSBAND

I will give youth for youth,
I will give truth for truth.
I will be all that you would have me be;
Only, remember this:
You fashion my bliss;
You make the world and heaven itself for me!

I promise this one thing,
Whatever life may bring
As we together watch years wax and wane,
Though all the world grow strange,
All other beings change,
Unchanging, constant still will I remain!

ONE OF THE THINGS which started the moratorium which resulted in all of the banks being closed by the United States government was the evidence before a Senate committee for the head of one of the biggest banks of the United States, that he drew down more than a million and a quarter dollars in bonuses in a brief period of time. So did the United States government out of income tax by putting thru a faked sale of securities to relatives at a loss enabling them to draw back when the income tax period was over. Dishonesty destroys confidence and the new United States government is meeting that unless it undertook a vigorous housecleaning at once the ultimate crash might wreck U.S.A. completely as a financial world. Will Rogers said that the Republicans are too superstitious to close a bank, they just naturally let them go to seed and shackled themselves and it was lucky the Democrats were new in office and not tied and shackled by too much red tape, precedent, accumulation and all the ragtag and bobtail of handicaps which a government accumulates in long tenure of office. Will Rogers replies to the "I told you so" and folks with cure-alls with a remark that most people can think up something which would be good for the patient—when they see the hearse going by.

CALIFORNIA has had another good shaking up and the climate boosters will no doubt proceed to inform us that they will hold water. After the San Francisco earthquake a few years ago the boosters said "There, wasn't that just a little shake, sort of spreading out the scenery to accommodate the ever-increasing population—and what have we here. We would have been noticed, they said, if it hadn't been for the big fire. They did admit the fire would be deserved in large part of Golden Gate city, but they did not admit that the fire was caused by the 'quake. California has climate, plenty of it and variety. It may have its earthquakes, pseudo General Hospital, where a Mr. Nobody from Nowhere graduates is provided. In the case of Kingston, the annual typhoid is 1,200, and for b-t years, the hospital accommodation has been 30 beds.

PROVISIONS OF MORTGAGE MORATORIUM

Canon Clinic Agreement Ratified by Ontario Government

STENCH BOMB LAW

Toronto, March 14 — Attorney General W. H. Price introduced to the Ontario Legislature the Mortgagors and Purchasers' Relief Act, 1933, which amends existing laws re mortgages and carrying charges extended before March 30, 1933, and does not apply to loans made since that date. Payment of principal under the 1932 Act is extended another year, while loans made after March 30, 1933, are considered new money and based upon economic conditions at present and depreciated values.

The Act aims chiefly at providing a means for mortgagor and mortgagee to arrive at just and fair settlement in their difficulties, and grants powers to the county judge to suspend payment up to a limit of six months at his discretion. A statement must be made by the mortgagee, the man who owns the money, to the mortgagor, setting out his circumstances and all the facts in connection, and the loan, such as revenue from the property, which he must own and live upon in order to receive relief, and all other facts.

Application to Judge

If, on this basis the mortgagee is not satisfied that the mortgagor will meet his obligations, the second step in the procedure is that he be taken in applying to the Judge. Hearings are to be in camera, without publicity, and the facts are to be placed before the court. The Judge, if he so decides, may issue an order referring the applicant from making any payments of interest, insurance, etc., for a period not exceeding six months in the case of the period, the mortgagor must, under the provisions of the Act, make payments to the mortgagee at the least 75 per cent of the aggregate amount of interest, insurance and taxes due in any year.

Mr. Thompson, the county Judge or the Master in Chambers, is Applies to York County, has power to vary his previous order at the expiry of the six months' period and give a further period of grace. But if unpaid taxes and interest on first mortgages have not been paid, the mortgagee may apply to the Judge for permission to foreclose the mortgage and the mortgagee would suffer accordingly.

"If a prima facie case has not been made out," stated Col. Price, "which would justify the Judge in declaring the Judge can dismiss the application and the mortgagee can then proceed. If a case has been made out before the Judge then the third step is provided for. The Judge in all such cases shall give all parties and all parties interested, including second mortgagees and all subsequent encumbrances, due notice before him. At this hearing, the Judge considers the evidence of the parties, reviews all facts and circumstances and then gives his opinion on the evidence before him as to which amount is entitled to relief the heavy by. As a given power to make an order."

Mistake Not Possible

Legislation introduced by Hon. Dr. J. M. Robb, Minister of Health, provides for ratification of agreements entered into by the Government and the two universities at Toronto and Kingston for the establishment of cancer radium clinics. The Government will make a yearly payment of $50,000 to Toronto General Hospital, where a Radium Institute is contemplated to be provided. In the case of Kingston, the annual payment is $20,000, for b-t years, the hospital accommodation being 30 beds.

F. W. Wilson, Cool West Windsor, delivered the debate on the Speech from the Throne, in a breathing denunciation of the Hepburn-Hunoo administration, especially in connection with the recent shakeup of Mr. Seybourn Lyal, the Progressive Leader in the House would speak on behalf of the Liberals.

"Where did Mr. Hepburn and the member for Brant get the mandate to shift the Lyal Cabinet in midstream?" queried Mr Wilson. "Where did they get the mandate to play fast and loose with the new intra-mural Leader? No Liberal or Progressive convention authorized it."

Mr. Wilson Criticized

Mr. Wilson attacked Mr. Nixon on the latter's criticism of Premier Hepburn's action in appointing the Toronto Mortgage Corporation. Commenting on other phases of the Throne Speech, Mr. Wilson said that the attack has served is to throw into bold relief the Prime Minister's ability and the reasonable record of the company referred to."

G. A. Seguin: Cons. Russell, challenged Mr. Hunoo to resign his seat and apply honestly to stand and endorse the wild statements made by Mr. Hepburn at Hamilton.

"Has the member for Brant gone Liberal, or has Mr. Hepburn gone Progressive or perhaps C.C.F.?" asked Mr. Seguin.

A saving to the province of over $1,000,000 will result from a graded salary cut of Ontario Civil Servants announced by Premier Henry, when the Public Power Act comes into force for part of last year ending December next, estimated at 90%. The reductions will also affect the Hydro Electric Power Commission, the Liquor Control Board, and the University of Toronto.

Avoid Conflict of Jurisdiction

To avoid conflict of jurisdiction and the Department of Health, and during power in any case, Attorney General's department. Attorney General Price introduced a bill which allows the fire marshal to pass regulations dealing only with fire risk explosion hazards and conditions of the Supreme Courts Act, to establish a time limit in which claimants may prosecute claims and avoid disagreements. The Statute of Limitations, are provided in an amendment introduced by Col. Price.

War memorials shall be preserved and cared for under a bill introduced by Col. Price, M.P.P., for South Essex, while E. J. Murphy, Conn. St. Patrick, introduced a bill to abolish the Optometry Act.

The right of marriage annulments in specified cases is provided under English Law is placed under the jurisdiction of the courts by an amendment to the Ontario Marriage Act, introduced by Col. Price. The bill serves to clarify the situation that has arisen in recent years, and by the Federal Parliament two years ago of amendments to the Federal Act which provided for annulment of divorces by the Ontario Supreme Court but which did not specifically adjust the matter of annulments.

Superior Than Wilderness

The City of Toronto's superior on incomes of $10,000 and over, was withdrawn in second reading by George Shields, Cons., Woodbine, on which he decided whether or not the proposed method of taxation was fair, but he contended that tax would injure the city and the province, the latter having accordingly an advantage to carry walk of life. The bill would penalize a section of the community while from all directions the argument is heard that there is much natural beauty there being only one escape from this situation in setting the whole

Joseph Harris, Conservative, Toronto-Southern, made a plea for more fealty in railway rates. Small manufacturers were handicapped by minimum carload regulations which were turning to trucks and other means of transporting their products. It was time the railways thought less of wheel and coal and more of package freight.

A reading of the Speech from the Throne on Canadian National was give the road a chance to live" was urged by Col. J. L. Ralston, Liberal financial critic. It was impossible for the system to function under its present capitalization but it could be made reasonable with the changes in its financial make-up.

There had been a "whispering campaign" against the C.N.R. since 1st in 1836 said Mr. Sanderson (Grenville, South Perth) what the Prime Minister has said in his speech, in this debate last week had been an "H.O.S. call for the undertakers to come and bury the Canadian National."

Discussing the Royal Commission on Transportation, Mr. Sanderson said all its labors had not added anything to the knowledge already held by the government, and pointed out to the long suffering citizens of Canada. The majority of the members of the commission favored private ownership, he said, and the commission's report seemed to him to carry the odium of amalgamation.

Mr. Sanderson predicted that one of three things would happen under the present. There would be complete amalgamation, or absorption of the C.P.R. by the G.W.R.; or absorption of the G.T.R. by the C.P.R., or he added, both roads would be in impotence or restricted to business that is calamity would occur.

PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA. IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED:

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED CITIZENS of the Great Dominion of Canada, being a free and independent people, in whom resides the sovereign right of self-defence, do hereby vigorously protest against the action of Radio Commissioner Hume Cronyn in censoring or attempting to censor and exclude from public broadcasting the Bible and of publishing the Bible and other sacred literatures of J. F. Rutherford, permitting to divine people, who have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, and that it was written, for the instruction of men, why sincere persons claim that the action of Radio Commissioner Cronyn is not only unfair and unjust to our day and bear direct relationship to the present crisis, and declare God's remedy for relief. We believe that these questions publicly discussed free from all censorship, wherein we are given to taken away These who object, or who may be offended by such discussion, have simply to decline and decline to hear.

We therefore, pray that the Dominion Parliament take immediate action removing from the Radio Commission the power to censor, license, prevent such lectures by radio and that the people be left free to determine what they may or may not hear, as in the world-wide repute and eminently qualified to interpret the Bible, such as we believe Rutherford is, can be depended upon to meet the demand that our radio stations be permitted to publicly broadcast his lectures. The question is, Shall the people be free to enjoy freedom or shall a few men deprive them of their God-given rights?

Japan Not Likely to Extend Operations Into North China

Tokyo, March 14 (AP)—Minister of War, General Sadao Araki, Japan's Nationalist leader and continuing figure in the Cabinet said today he did not think Japan would extend its military operations into North China proper.

But the General whose power rests on the unquestioning support of military elements in government declared Japan would make no promise of what course would be taken.

Concerning all the various projects, which reports have said Japan may take up now that the armies are poised on the Northern Frontier undisputed Chinese territory, he said the only answer possible was:

"I do not think so".

Written questions presented him by the Associated Press, each answered in these words, were:

"Do you think that because the Japanese army extend operations south of the Great Wall into the Peiping-Tientsin area of northern China?

"Does the Japanese army intend to assist Manchukuo to extend its boundaries south of the Wall?"

Will it assist in re-seating Henry Pu Yi, now the nominal head of the Manchukuo government, on the throne of his forefathers at Peiping?

Will it assist Chinese leaders in North China to establish a self-governed State similar to Manchukuo and, perhaps, affiliated with that State?

FIRST NIGHT IN FILMLAND

'After the Ball" at Capitol is Brilliant Society Production

Elissa Strange .... Esther Ralston
Jack Harrowby .... Basil Rathbone
Lucia ..... Mary Morris
Victorine ..... Jeanne Aubin
Peter Strange ..... Gilbert Emery
Albert ..... Clifford Heatherley

That favorite of the British stage and screen, Basil Rathbone and Esther Ralston, coco U. S. screen favorites, are co-starred in the latest screen production, with a fine cast in a gripping story of love and society at the capitol Theatre on Monday night thrilling with the exquisite refinement of their playing. "After the Ball", is a brilliant comedy as captained by the playwright Arthur Wing Pinero, so brought to the League of Nations and to the Capitol Theatre is delightfully interesting way, as they engage in the affairs of society.

Elissa is a star who lends his romance to any play, and Jack Harrowby is a gay, debonair, delightful past. English reviews call the play heavy, pretentious and dull, but without offence. This is all because of superb characterizations and the grace of the actors, and the poetry of the dialogue.

The story is set at Geneva as delegates decide on naval armaments.

The story centres around Peter Strange, British delegate and his wife, who have a dispute as he has to work on his duties and he prevents his going with his wife to the ball. The wife and her friend go to the ball and by "accident". Harrowby played by Basil Rathbone meets her and has a flirtation with Elissa Strange (Esther Ralston) though the guests of Lucia (Jean Ardienne) appears ready to elope with Albert.

Interest figures around the loss of a purse containing the plans of Albourne, played by Clifford Heatherley, who had taken it so that per husband might not be disturbed from attending her to the ball. This is the purse which Peter Strange finds by philandering of Harrowby, the purse handed to the wife but the plot when looking darkest for the husband and wife, but all is solved given that Hitts turn over the question of a code. It is finally revealed that the code is contained in the Bible, the wife but by the maid. Harrowby is enlightened and the wife returned to his self-esteem and the play ends happily with Harrowby and the courier.

Dialogue and acting are brilliant the settings are just what may be expected in a play dealing with high life and diplomacy.

Clifford Heatherley as Albourne has caught in the comic relief, in the graceful performances of the Basil Marks' Jeanne Aubin and revealing of real merit played as Victorine. George Morris, Jeanne Aubin and Peter Strange had the difficult part of the husband which he played with the same excellence.

Pellish, rarely, elegance, sparkle, and good taste mark this one of the most brilliant British productions of the screen.

You call this surplus milk for dividend purposes asked Dr. Pickel cynically.

"We are not paying dividends," answered Mr. Cousins. Dr. Pickel repeated the charge.

Col. Harry Mullins, Conc., Marquette, an old-time resident from the West, asked what cultured bacteria was. Mr. Cousins replied it was inoculated with bacteria.

"Are you in a combination of any sort to fix prices?" asked Mr. Mullins. "No", replied Mr. Cousins.

The recent advance in butter prices shot up cream prices to the farmers, said Mr. Cousins. There was an increase of about 25 per cent. in recent weeks.

Mr. Speaker Asks

Frank Monette of the Perfection Dairy Company was the next witness. Mr. Monette said did not pay "surplus" prices. "It was a kind of bonus to encourage quality and shippers".

Mr. Monette traced prices paid to farmers and the retail prices to consumers, beginning in January 1932, the farmer's price was $1.46, the retail price 22c a quart. Then in December 1932, the Farmers' price was 91.5 cents, the retail price 20 cents. In February 1933, the Farmers' price was 81.15.

"Do I understand you paid for your milk at the rate in 1932 and 1933?" Mr. Tummon asked.

"Yes, sir", said Mr. Monette, answered Mr. Monette. "That was the price to all shippers. We bought no surplus milk. There is no skim milk included."

Campbellford Maroons and Grill's Garage are Winners of First Games in District League

Maroons Defeat Cobourg All-stars 5-1 in Rough Game

FIGHT BREAKS OUT

Picton Loses 8-2 in Group "B" Fixture With "Mechanics

Bedlam broke loose, players dropped their sticks and fists flew, with even the local fandom taking part in the melee late in the third period when the Campbellford Maroons defeated the Cobourg "All Stars" by the score of 5 to 1 in the nightcap affair on opening night of the Quinte ville and District League: while Grills' Garage, lone entry in group "B" defeated the trophy holders, Picton, in the opening game by the score of 6 to 2. The Maroons blotted their time by setting off the bourgeois after trailing 1 to 0 at the end of the initial frame. Both games were played at Belleville.

The free-for-all fight which broke out late in the third period of the second game was the aftermath of many cases of high sticking, cross and other bits of rough play, despite the efforts of referee Gregg who tried to keep the game in hand. The fight started after Maroon defenceman Cunningham had floored Acorn Ackerman with a left to the jaw. Ackerman came back to floor Campbell, but both lads broke loose apart with the result that a pretzel fistic encounter developed in the middle of the ice, scheduled Referee Green chased MacArthur for a minor penalty and order was restored.

This game proved the attraction of the evening, with Campbellford playing cautious, heady hockey and slowing up the game until Cobourg, carrying the ball, began to tire when they stood in on Hulin after taking a perfect pass from Campbellford, and scored the opening goal. The second frame opened with Cobourg pressing hard for a replay; mid-way through the period Fred Ingram received a pass and pivotted solo effort of the night evening the count to his credit. Campbellford then took the play past McGregor and in that gentleman knew what was happening.

The third period proved to be a parade as far as Campbellford was concerned. Harry Ingram whipped the rubber past the Cobourg goalie on Davis' pass and later this same player scored another when he dispolsed his brother's set-up and in the second, Hall, Davis and Fred Ingram combined nicely with the former bringing the ball down behind the final score 5 to 1 Fred Ingram backhanded one past Ackerman on Davis' pass from a rise-off near the Cobourg defence.

Summaries Broken Now

Hulin, in the nets, for the Maroons played a steady, sturdy game and was ably defended by Harry Ingram and MacArthur. Hall improved rather costly to the Maroons as they lost the services of their alternate right wing. Lloyd Copperwaite, who was injured in the melee early in the second period when a flying stick broke his left leg above the knee. Lloyd looked the best of the first line while the "kid line" play by Rod Bradley with Bob Hall and Hendy prominent. Davis also played good hockey for the losing club Jimmie Ritter looked the best of the visitors while Hall the bulk of the forward line was carried by Archie Ackerman and Bill Dicky. These latter two teamed nicely with their combination plays.

The line-up:

Cobourg—Goal, McCoubry; defence, S. Ackerman and J. Ritter; centre, Campbell; wings, Dey and Gerald; subs, Hamilton, Ackerman and Baker.

Campbellford—Goal, Hulin; defence, H. Ingram and MacArthur; centre, Davis; wings, F. Ingram and McKay; subs, Hendy, Bradley and Copperwaite.

Referee—Bill Green, Belleville.

Summary:

First Period

Cobourg—Dey (Campbell) 4.50
Penalties—Ritter 2, Hendy.

Second Period

Campbellford—F. Ingram 5.45
Penalties—Campbell, MacArthur, J. Ritter.

Third Period

(Davis) .....
Campbellford—H. Ingram 2.45
Campbellford—Davis (F. Ingram) 4.00
Campbellford—F. Ingram (Davis) 5.30
Penalties—Davis, Dey, J. Ritter, Davis, MacArthur, Campbell.

Grills' Garage Win

In the opening game Grills' Garage rode roughshod over the Picton Interprovincial Bridge Kiwanis by a 7 to 2. The Belleville entry were far too fast and carried the play throughout. Barriage, H. Cousins and Wallace all scored for the home team in the first frame while Cousins scored again for Grills and "Hap" Day another in the second with Rodgings scoring for the Prince Edward County team. Barriage also scored for Picton and Jack Cousins scored two for Grills' chalks.

Shiner Senkoid, in the nets stood out in a baffling manner while Carl Morgan was about the fastest man on the ice. Harry Cousins, Barriage and Jack Canning at a front line looked somewhat below par in the second and last of the season Grills. Pyr...the losing team were Welsh, Hodgins, Myrals and Boyle looked the best.

Group "B"

Picton—Hodgins (Welch) 2.30
Hodgins and Boyle; assists, Wallace wings, Haddon and Welsh; subs, Cy Welch, Storms, Rinn and Cole.

Grills' Garage—Goal, Sinkpoi; defence, Morgan and Cousens; centre, H. Canning; wings, J. Canning and Barriage; subs, T. Day, H. Day, Millar and Welsh.

Knocks and Boosts

Time surely flies....It was just exactly twenty years ago this week that the late Benny Whitty, of the Belleville juniors of 1913, was picked on at the "all star" meeting held at the old rink, Benny was a brother of Billie Whitty, now coach of the Campbellford Maroons, and the supreme sacrifice during the world war. Benny Whitty, who will remember Benny Whitty, when he caverned up behind the Belleville Arcade's rod and while clad Belleville juniors. Benny was recognized as one of the best defence men, both rving and carrying, ever to grace a Belleville uniform.

Belleville had another player picked on the mythical "junior all stars" in 1913 in the person of Stanley Horne, who hailed and for the locals that year. The Belleville "kids" played at before them in '13, and they met the powerful Aura Lee juniors in the championship game. Roger Greenlock the Bill Marsden "grinder" proved very much for Stan Horne and Belleville. Fully 1,000 fans jammed into the old Arnott Arena that night to see the battle and be seen. To this day local supporters remember the night as the greatest fan day of some of the Aura Lee players. Jack Ryan, Bill Ryan and some of the others who carried beards as long as your arm, as we recall it.

.31 was during the latter part of the 1913 season when the old Memorial Cup was brought to Belleville. Senators played the first game of the championship series with Toronto City. The sport fans of Gotham were quite impressed with Canada's national game at the time.

The all-star 1913 junior O.H.A. team was chosen as follows: Goal, Rupert Lloyd, Peterboro; point, Bert Chitty, Fellerville; cover-point and captain, Russell Sanderson, Woodstock; rover, Roger Call, Oshawa; centre, Robert C. Armstrong, Weedstock; first wing, Clement W. Tobin, Stratford; left wing, Wilbur Marcus, London.

We are pleased to state, that W. J. "Peanut" Mills, who underwent an operation for the removal of his appendix on Saturday last, is progressing as well as can be expected. Belleville fans will be pleased considerably during the past two or three seasons with opportunities and have seen a lot of much better advantage during the coming season with the all-star team being removed. Incidentally, we understand, that there is to be a meeting of the executive of the Nationals later this week when starting news relative to the executive and the ball team in general may be forth-coming.

Down in Kingston the champion Frazer held their annual meeting last week and Anderson Geary Jayes was re-elected as president for the year 1933. Frank Fairbairn, again, appointed manager of the Frazer, while a coach will be appointed before the season opens. It was decided, at the annual meeting of the C.O.R.L., that a Kingston man would be chosen as vice-president of the Central League. At that time the Kingston weights did not name their executive but last word was received that Art Anderson was under choice as Max Swanson's understudy.

About noon yesterday the head K.I.-T favorites were notified that if they did not play in Gananoque last night when the Aces were to benefit their game to the Island Town hyroxies. Manager Joe Ekard, who incidentally had just risen out of a sick bed, tried to gather a team to play the big boy but at the last minute of the hour could not muster a full one. Some say that one Aces can have been aided to play a game right away from home with but the honest notice.Just who the mitimeist out-come of Secretary Rickard's statement will be, remains to be seen. On the other hand the local favorites will be seen in action at the Napanee favorites at the Arena this evening.

As the boys down in the "bait pen" call it, the "blood and thunder" league opened with flying colors on Monday night when Grills' Garage, the Belleville entry in group "B" of the local O.H.A. circuit, had put to route the Picton interprovincial bridge Kiwanis by a 7 to 2 decision over Grills' "All Stars" took to the ice to endeavour giving the Campbellford Maroons the well known "going over". Strange as it may seem to Mr. Gerald Campbell, who from the "Summer Town" along Lake Ontario, the affair did not go as well as expected. The Maroons met only scheduled game to those 3 to 1 in favor but when the general free-for-all broke loose in the third period, Mr. Maroon-ed the "All Stars" and say the worse of the "game" and "fight" was not yet ordered. The game was a typical post-season affair and the fans missed it today are be-moaning the fact, as action aplenty was to be seen all through.

For all games in group "B" one referee can handle the situation quite well, but for the senior "A" we are firmly convinced, that two officials are needed in these games. No immediate blame for the "spearing" could be laid at the door of Referee Green on Monday night as both teams had the proverbial chip on their shoulder all night, but it seemed to be looking for trouble and the referee could only lose his head. MacArthur boarded Campbell and Archie took a "poke" at "Slim". This is the sort of thing that all players big had been looking for and sticks were dropped while the referee waded in with the attitude result, that one could hardly tell who was who or the chances to separate the would be leather-pushers. All in all it was a real hockey game with high sticks, heavy body checking and what have you. Just one of those things that John Fan loves. Another double-header in the same group is booked for Wednesday night. "Nuf said".

Owing to some misunderstanding the first game was rather late in starting. It was decided to play the

New York, March 14—(AP)—The process of reconstruction under Manager Casey Stengel, Brooklyn Dodgers disposed of one of their novel features of 1932 when Lefty Clark was promptly advanced a notch in the National League standing to third place. Clark was one of the most famous of all their plays for Manager Wilbert Robinson's men and already won the claim of their new boss to be a much stronger entry for the 1933 pennant hunt.

LUCKY BIRD "S"

By Kathrn Bemis Wilson

The only two dollar bill that Georgie Swope ever had in his life was saved twenty cents a night about a month ago. Twenty cents a night—counting him to stump objectively in Chester Park—would have been thrown over starting straight ahead, nearly nothing. That is, nothing but Georgie. Georgie was born in Kentucky, the first green of shrubs, the first red robin, the first yellow buttercup, proud hyacinths, modern white phlox, creeping myrtle, and an grand old trees.

Even when a pretty girl took a second look at Georgie Swope she was unmoved. Even when she glanced appreciatively at his curly, dark-brown, neatly wrinkled young man's suit—a medium suit, by the way, tailored to any male inhabitant. Georgie was unmoved by her. Five times each night and a generous number on Saturday and Sunday Georgie had stood in front of the window of the barber shop that trimmed that barber shop. Sunday hours, too, and he'd peered carelessly back from a haircut trimmed long back of Barber J. girl's right ear and a profile cut as you grown kid Charles, by the way, is a customer and he spelled recent honey slowly, and the answer to the question of a shave. Nothing less than a fifth Avenue haircut and shave with a manicure other than a talented barber had trimmed that barber long for

By Rex Beach

"I had practically no votes in the primaries," he said. "Almost! You don't know that race! A woman is pretty in the fall, and another pretty in the spring, and something to be explained. I was pitched up, swept down, I was no more than a cork, a straw, strawser whipped by a raging cyclone. But pretty! Or wonderful! Good Lord, and I'm sorry wouldn't know! And I don't destroy your illusions, Mr. Gaby, about the spark a little, now and then. That's no crime. But I'm not going out for the life of me, whether it's freedom or bondage, whatever you call it."

"Do you confuse innocence with ignorance?" Possibly purity is the word you have in mind. Men are so vile."

"Oh, stop your flip chatter! If I thought you were as cynical about it as you pretend to be, I—I'd strangle you, Dad, you're being smart, I suppose. That's post-war stuff and it's as disagreeable as the other kind. I'm very serious, Pop. Furthermore I—almost wish Alanna hadn't come. I'm doomed. If I don't marry I've made a botch of everything. To honest Heaven she has wagged his bald head, he strokes it with an unsteady hand, and he's made moist sounds with his lips.

"Darling! Please don't chaff! Even Mother couldn't stand that. Quack if you must, but don't chaff. I'm all in a dither, down, during the past few minutes, about things I don't mind being told, namely, that I've done nothing to be ashamed of. What I've been through and massage it in!"

"That's a relief, Wagner admitted. "I don't know yet whether you're lying or not."

"Gaby, such a waste of effort. Ah! I know how it is when a girl goes as far as you've gone with this fellow, she owes it to herself to marry him and make an honest man of him."

"Amen! At last we're in accord."

"Of course he asked you to marry him?"

"I don't seem to recall it. Not in so many words. We've had much in so many words. We've had much to talk about, but I've done nothing to be ashamed of. He mentioned something matrimonial, but that seems unnecessary—and he's well to do."

"That's a relief," Wagner was considerably mollified. "He'll need to be well fixed. . . . Of course you love him?"

"Love for him as a taxi driver paints for rain. I'd marry him if he had six wives."

That stung. The scowl of disapproval. The father grunted with astonishment. "Good Lord! "I'll laugh if he turned out to be a bootlegger."

"In that case we might supply you with some good ones."

"Lord, but you're tickled with yourself! Not forgetting your modesty, eh? Well, I think you've behaved disgracefully."

Alanna, meanwhile, sampled a melon without enthusiasm. "Dad, I'm sorry, but I'm not going to meet Melodylike. But be Hind it. I'd tender him a word. I wrote down his exact resistance. . . . See! I never went so long without a cigarette. I needed it, too. I'm just one big dass with a pair of eyes in it."

"Are his prospects in any consequence?"

"I presume you're thinking about the Four Hundred. There isn't any Four Hundred. I wouldn't know if we wouldn't be so prominent. . . . Isn't Alanna! It has a lovely sound. I don't care who he is."

"I hope you won't object if I investigate this giant?"

"Go as far as you like. I'm doing the same myself. In a one-piece suit. We're swimming together. If he survives I'll surprise you. What's more you learn about him don't tell me for . . . I'd miss you at the wedding."

"Bo! You propose to marry him whether or no?"

"Nothing so peevish as that. You're not, you know. There's a big wedding for me, reckless? I'll bet you're going to be asked when I don't give up. It will be something nice, of course, you extravagant wretch. You'll furnish it all right, with generosity, for you never do things by halves, do you? No, he answered, as she knew he would. Why not a small fifteen room co-op on Park Avenue? Furnished, of course; you have such exquisite taste. And a country place on the island. It matters not how simple it is so it's stabling are roomy and there's a greenhouse and a swimming pool. Surely it's worth that much to get rid of me."

"I don't want to get rid of you," the father declared with real feeling, but I'm not concerned with your own emotions rather than with his. Dreamily you propose to—"

"It's all in the Vile Domestic. We'll plant passion flowers and hydrotis there and I'll experiment with pickles and nasturtium flowers every summer."

"Jove! You have got it bad," Wagner admitted ruefully.

"Well, I've tried to be a good father to you and to give you everything you wanted, haven't I? I've had my fun, and I'll say that I've had it and that his can handle you."

There was a cautious glint in Alanna's eyes when she turned them upon him and said: "Honest, Dad?"

"You get a lot of fun out of shocking me but what will you have a child of your own and she tries it on you." He strode off towards his car.

The spoon stopped out of Alanna's hand, her fingers, for a while she stared mildly into space and a light came into her face which not even her father had seen there. A child of her own! A child of Dave's! Here was a thought. She stirred, she closed her eyes.

CHAPTER TWENTY-I.

Dave and Alanna met on the beach at the usual hour but they did nothing more energetic than sit in the shade. They had little time alone with each other, however, for the place was crowded and dusty as was popular. Both were still in bathing suits and Dave in particular experienced a feeling of utter unreality only on occasions when he caught a fleeting pressure of her fingers or some involuntary look of appreciation from Alanna that he was not under the spell of some extraordinary dream. That the happy events of the night before were not pure imagination.

They arranged to meet again at five for the late dinner dance, and to dine together that evening; then Sam walked home in even greater happiness than when he left the Hall. Following his return from Alanna's he had had breakfast, a breakfast of unwelcome thought had obstructed itself. It had concerned Sam that she might not know that he was so wealthy.

This possibility had presenting itself suddenly. He had left him in bed and had turned him cold. Impatiently he had dismissed it. Of course she knew. Everybody knew. His nationality had afforded him a field for public discussion far more than one of Baltimore's dinner parties and the things got around. Alanna could not help but know; for that matter, his confident his attitude towards her must have made it plain. Re-assured, he had walked on.

But his mind had reverted to the question again and again and it continued to bother him. Paradis was a queer, secretive place: people came and went; one sensation followed another; there was nothing orderly or normal about it. Nobody inquired who his neighbor might be. He scarcely knew that he had tried to tell Alanna, but had lacked the opportunity. In however, there was no comfort: he should have created an opportunity. The whole trouble was there had been no premeditation and he was coming to shockishing time. Even at the time it happened he had not been wholly convinced that either of them was sincere. There had been a suspicion in his mind that they were in the grip of a momentary madness, a midnight witchery that would vanish with the day.

Reason assured him that his apprehensions must be unfounded, assuming that they were in what difference did it make? His he finally asked himself, did not one of them other girls, she didn't care what he was; she had told so. She was the daughter of rich, useless destiny, a pagan, she had no taboos, moral, racial or otherwise. He felt much easier at the conclusion of her statement, in fact effect. "Less than the dust!" There was a romantic, heroic dignity to the love of a tempestuous creature like her it stopped at nothing—it mocked at cause. It took all and it gave all.

Mr. Wagner eyed the card which the man in hotel livery brought him. Beneath the name was written: "On project Personal."

"Does she want to see me, or my daughter?" he inquired.

The employee arched his brows, shrugged, murmured an excuse for his ignorance of "the English," whereupon Wagner repeated his question in a louder voice. He did this several times. After a while, more by reason of pantomimation than of emphasis, the fellow understood and left. Wagner, in the meantime, settled to see Monsieur, not Mademoiselle.

Mr. Wagner looked at the ornamental gilt clock on the mantel. Pink golden cupids crawled over it and one of them pointed roguishly at the dial with which they were associated. Alanna was at the bathing club with Sam Lee and would not be home for more than an hour. "Show her up," Wagner directed the waiter in a thirty, adjusted his tie, which needed no adjusting, smoothed his eyebrows and touched up his short-cropped gray moustache. Possibly she would turn out to be a brunette. Probably she—Wagner preferred blondes and he had never understood why that was wrong so crazy over Alanna. . . . Not all right with that fellow either, and now at the Beach with him. He supposed, to look up Balfour. In the afternoon and make some searching inquiries. He hoped the girl was smart-looking and had small feet.

The valley was indeed blonde, and pretty, and smartly gotten up. Her feet were not too large, Wagner greeted her with warmth and they talked in a desultory manner for several minutes. He purposely avoided inquiring the reason for her coming and monopolized the conversation in a warm, cheery manner, while he put her at ease. It was nice to meet fellow Americans in a foreign country and a pleasure to meet a beautiful young woman anywhere. Was she married? Why? What a pity! He knew so many young women and the name was not unfamiliar. Hark! He had known a member of Harris and had won a few in his time. Ha! ha!

DON'T TRIFLE WITH COMMON CONSTIPATION

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brings Relief

Constipation gets its grip on a person almost unawares. It often starts with small little things. Headaches. Listlessness. Bad complexion. Unpleasant breath. If unchecked, it may seriously impair your health.

Fortunately, you can avoid this danger by eating a delicious cereal. Laboratory tests show that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides two things needed to overcome common constipation: "bulk" and vitamin B. ALL-BRAN is also a rich source of iron for the blood.

Biological tests demonstrate that the "bulk" in bran is similar to that in leafy vegetables. Inside the body it forms a soft mass, which gently clears out the intestinal wastes.

How much better than taking unpleasant patent medicines. Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. Serious cases, with every meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

BIG SCENIC SPECTACLE "SIGN OF THE CROSS" NOW AT THE BELLS

"The Sign of the Cross," Cecil B. DeMille's thrilling picture spectacle opens a four-days engagement at the Bells today, with a matinee daily.

DeMille's latest offering is spectacular and lavish, it is said.

The great feasts and debaucheries of degenerate Roman nobles, the magnificence and extravagance of a wealthy and decadent civilization, the sight of a city in flames, the vast amphitheatre completely filled with a howling, excited crowd, the Christian martyrs meeting in secret, soldiers of the Empire in their military trappings, gladiatorial combats, orgies, Amazons, vast dungeons filled with wretched prisoners, women led to lions, lions, crocodiles, elephants, wild animals, slaves made up in all these it is declared help to make the picture one of awe-inspiring magnitude.

Wilson Barrett's story is one of love, love separated by the differences between Christian faith and Roman paganism. It is the story of Marcia, beautiful Christian maid, ready to die for her faith, and Marcus, most favored of Roman royals, ready to sacrifice everything, including life, for love of her.

The cast is an exceptional one presenting the following players: Frederic March as Marcus Superbus, Elissa Landi as Marcia, Claudette Colbert as the beautiful, cruel Poppaea and Charles Laughton as Nero.

Cecil B. DeMille spent almost a year preparing for the production in research, building of sets, designing of costumes and casting the actors. At the end of the picture consumed ten weeks. One scene, the city of Rome burning, took three days to film. It was destroyed by fire, during the burning scene, in less than thirty minutes. The presentation of "The Sign of the Cross" marks the fifty-seventh feature film that he has presented to the screen.

During the four days' engagement at the Bells, performances will be given daily at 2.30 and 7.00 and 9.10. "The Sign of the Cross" will be the Bells' feature, today, Friday, March, or "Forever Yours" with Frefrot of Rome, tries to save her from the mad king's decision.

MATCH FACTORY EXPLOSION IN HULL COSTS FIVE GIRL WORKERS THEIR LIVES

Five Young Girls Lose Lives in Hull Match Factory Blast, Many Hurt

Bodies Early Recovered From Ruins of Factory, Are Unrecognizable, so Badly Burned Were They in Sudden Explosion

CHECK-UP FOR MORE BODIES

Twenty-Five Girls Employed at Plant All in Teens or Early Twenties, Regular Employees Working on Shifts

HULL, Quebec, March 15 (AP)—Five working girls were burned to death here today when fire gutted the Canada Match Factory, following an explosion. Firemen are poking through the smoking ruins, searching for five or six who are missing. Twenty-one people lie in hospital beds, seared and charred by the blast and flames.

Roaring up from a mixing tank, the explosion trapped 15 girls, working nearby, without a chance to escape. Flames shot to every corner of the one-storey, brick building, shutting off entrances, enclosing the screaming girls like rats in a trap.

The flames seared the bodies beyond immediate recognition. Fireman held out slight hope for the five or six girls still missing when the flames were under control.

The factory was located north of Hull, a block from that section of the Chelsea Road known as St. Joseph Boulevard. No buildings were located near it. The fire started near the main entrance of the factory which was only one storey high, of brick construction and with many windows. The only explanation whisp so many lives were lost was that the heavy explosion carried the fire to all parts of the structure, and cut off the entrances.

Twenty-five employed about 35, as taken from the ruins when the dead, although in normal times double that number were at work in the factory. The night shift was divided into weekly shifts in order to bring up the average. Twenty girls were on the night shift.

All the girls were residents of the immediate locality and in their teens or early twenties. The bodies were brought to the Hull morgue, although in normal times double that number were at where the explosion occurred

SUN SHINES AGAIN AS MERCURY RISES

Sun, though comparatively weak in power, was much stronger than the day before; a bright sun shining through the hovering clouds for lengthy periods, gave a touch of spring to the city and district, and made yesterday's ice-coated roads and sewers into shiny streams and puddles. Wednesday's melt on the thermometer was not as great as the previous day, the maximum being at 50. On Tuesday a high of 57 was recorded at the Moira Street station.

TRAFFIC RESUMES ITS NORMAL FLOW

Bus lines, city and transport companies resumed interrupted schedules on Wednesday after having been tied up for a day by the almost unprecedented activities on Tuesday, caused by the great deluge of ice on highways and roads throughout the district. Last day's melting thaw on Tuesday, coming as a Wednesday morning frost, left a glare ice on the highways from the roads, Hydro and telephone companies reported little damage from the wind and ice which covered the district on Tuesday.

THREE M. P.'S TO SPEAK HERE

Mr. W. E. Thompson, M.P. for South Hastings; Mr. F. P. Wilks, M. P. for Souris, Man., and Mr. J. T. Shaver, M.P. for Stormont, will be the speakers at the annual meeting of the Citizens' Forum Committee on Friday evening.

LOCAL ICE MEN STILL AT WORK

Loomen of the city were still at work on Wednesday cutting the last few feet of ice present on the Bay. Even with the warmer weather and sprinkling of rain, there is still a few feet, the ice is holding up well, and is of good clear quality. It is hoped to declare here soon able to cut their complement with little trouble in the present season.

M. SORSELEIL GIVES TALK

"Redemption of a Boy" Subject of Address to Kiwanians

"The Redemption of a Boy" was the subject of an address delivered by M. A. Sorseleil, deputy minister of public welfare to the Trenton Kiwanis Club on Tuesday, which was attended by a number of Children's Aid Inspectors from Eastern Ontario. His address was one of the most instructive and interesting. Mr. Sorseleil told of the work now being done by the Ontario Training School for Boys in Bowmanville, which had its inception through the activities of the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs in the province of Ontario. Other guests included members of the T.'s Men's Club and Rotary Club of Deseron, who is a most active member of the Club and who considers one of the most important industries in the city was the booster for the day and Harvey Davison and Dr. T. D. Boston are today wearing a happy smile for Dorsey Pratt's generosity in these two were recipients of a sport shirt manufactured in Belleville.

Notification was given the members that an inter-city visit had been arranged with the Peterboro Club for April 6th and it is to be hoped every member will take the afternoon off and make the trip to the Kawartha City. The speaker will be supplied by the local club and other interesting features arranged by the hosts. On March 28th, the annual Ladies' Night of the local club will be celebrated with Dr. Christie Mills, O.B.E., as the guest speaker. It is the wish of the executive, however, that members be present and bring with him a farmer friend. W. C. Mikel, Secretary, announced the visitation of the club after the toys introduced by T. D. Boston; Harry Allen, in charge for the district, George Cole introduced the speaker of the day and Kiwanis appreciation was most ably expressed by F. J. O. Henry.

Real Fine Boss!

Fred Deacon in proposing his booster did so upon a novel idea. The birthpieces of the members were read and the one who was the farthest from this city was given the prize. Deacon was born in a town in Charlottetown, P.E.I., and was the fortunate winner. Fred Deacon, in his turn, was a close second. Deacon stated that one of the best industry was one of the greatest in Canada is that of the Deacon Brothers, invested in it. "Canada" as the property of Fred Deacon, his interests very little manufactured goods but they are first class throughout outfitters and machines to execute the work in the country. Deacon explained the whole art of "Canada" that has first was entitled to manufacturing, which is now established by the residents of Labrador and also the Northwest Mounted Police. Mr. Deacon explained he would be pleased to show visitors or residents through the factory at any time. Fred Deacon thanked again at length into just what is being done in this city. Rev. Mr. Earle Abbott moved a vote of thanks, Mike Shapiro as song leader and Leo J. Jones, Q.C., as Kiwanis Club member, Clifford Barrager was introduced to the club.

In opening his remarks on the subject dealt with, Sorseleil stated, that redemption of a boy was a slur on modern society in that it implies that the boy was worth redemption but to come because boys are reared in poor homes and that is not the fault that to go after them; "Eighty per cent. of the boys are sent to the institutions", said the speaker, "come from big homes and that there is a lack of moral standards despite the fact that there is a church on almost on that class of homes. Home making is the greatest thing in life, we were but redemption has

LATE SIR HENRY THORNTON

The passing of Sir Henry Thornton, C.B.E., former president and general manager of the Canadian National Railways, who died in a New York City hospital on Tuesday afternoon removes one of the greatest railway figures of modern days. His history covers not only Canada, but the United States and England. That his great gifts were yet not used to the full was the impression in various countries, in India which offered him an opportunity to assume a railroad post and from the United States where he was held in highest estimation. But recently he had been in conference with President Roosevelt.

Major General Sir Henry Worth Thornton, K.B.E., was one of the outstanding figures in Canadian railroad history. To him fell the task of unifying the several lines which were brought together under the Canadian National Railways. He was appointed President and chairman of the Board of Directors in 1922 and served in that post until his resignation in July, 1932.

The early years of his work with the great Canadian transportation system were devoted to bringing about improvement in personnel and equipment and the conversion of the various lines into a single organism. The changing picture of financial conditions brought forth a conflict of opinions respecting the advisability of many expenditures, however, and in 1931 years Sir Henry was under fire in parliament at Ottawa. His resignation was accepted as of August 1, 1932, and Mr. S. J. Hungerford, former vice-president, succeeded him.

Although born in the United States, the high mark in Sir Henry's career were in England and Canada. Brilliant successes as a railroad executive in England led to his appointment in 1914 as general manager of the Great Eastern Railway. He held that position until 1922 when he was chosen by Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, then Prime Minister, as head of the Canadian National Railways.

He was twice married, first to Virginia Dyer Blair in 1901, second to Martha Watries in 1926. He had a son and a daughter by his wife.

When Sir Henry resigned from C.N.R. he said: "In my opinion a publicly-owned railway can be successful only if the management has the complete confidence of the owners. Public criticism indicates that such confidence is at least not general in this time of financial depression, and in view of the fact that a commission is examining the whole Canadian railway situation."

Sir Henry was born at Logansport, Indiana in November, 1871. He was educated at St. Paul's School, Concord, N.H., and the University of Pennsylvania, Department of Civil Engineering. He was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1894.

Sir Henry is remembered in Belleville where he was several times a guest speaker at public functions. He had a number of visits to this terminal in the course of the performance of his duties as the chief executive of the railroads. The co-operation of the workers with the executive was the theme of one address here.

For nearly forty years he had been engaged in the railroading industry. In this capacity he had taken a great part in the upbuilding of the Empire. The railway as a means of transportation in the present day world is the sinew of nations, and Sir Henry realized the weighty burden which rested upon him.

In these days when the railway problems of Canada are very great, and when those of other countries such as the United States, are crying for solution, Canadians will long remember the man who guided the Canadian National Railways.

As a man he possessed great talents. These he used with the full force of his energetic personality.

HOARDERS' ERROR

Those who are inclined to hoard material things and wealth have been given a good example of the evils of this policy in the United States when a national crisis was precipitated when many believed in the attitude of "every man for himself with the devil taking the hindmost." It did not pay, for the hindmost was just as well off as the foremost.

Rector, Sargent of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church in New York speaking on hoarding compared man's different natures to a human body. Greed, Moore. The lower portions of the house were set apart for the animal or practical life while the spirit lived above. Dr. Sargent saw in hoarding of material things interference with the will of God and he said "today men are called for consecrated purposes, not for material things." He said that in the past most of people's time was being spent on the lower floor. "How futile," he said, "is the love of material gold at the expense of loyalty to the upper floor!" Some people even attempt to fool God and only succeed in fooling themselves as those who hoarded gold and who withdrew all their cash to cause a panic throughout the world's greatest republic. A new idea of unselfishness has to take the place of materialism for the good of one lies in the good of all.

FLAMES

Hate is a flame of sullen hue
That smolders many a lifetime through,
And when it blazes still is dark,
Though fired by an unceasing spark.

Love is a flame of ardent glow,
Blue are its gleams that come and go,
And steadfast, deep, within its heart,
Beam rays that earth cannot impart.

Swift-burning is the flame, desire,
A self-consuming, dazzling fire,
As brilliant as exotic flowers,
A flame that scars, destroys, devours.

Prayer is a flame which, day and night,
Flings up its banner, shining, white;
They rise, they soar, so tall and straight
They reach at last to heaven's gate.

"SILENT CAL" MYTH DISSOLVED

"KEEPING COOL WITH CAL" was an expression much used across the line when Calvin Coolidge was president, indicating that President Coolidge was always cool, collected and never lost his poise. "Silent Cal" was another nickname given the president, indicating that he was like the wise old owl who sat on the old tree and the more he heard the less he spoke. Certainly Calvin Coolidge was not loquacious and never disturbed needless language. One of his biographers, however, Herman Beatty, who was employed by the president as consultant during the period in which he contributed a daily article to the newspapers, called the "Coolidge Silence" a myth. Although a famous "stay-at-home" Mr. Coolidge longed above everything else to travel, and the man known as "Silent Cal" often talked for hour after hour when in company with close friends and associates, according to Mr. Beatty. Of James J. Walker, Mayor Jimmie, of New York, Mr. Coolidge said:

"He has the Celtic ability to put all his goods in the front window—and leave none in reserve; has shrewdness rather than any real ability; the kind of man, who, if you wake him from a sound sleep to make a speech, is able to start right in speaking. But, if you examine the speech later, you will find he has said nothing worth while."

Illuminative of his own political strategy he once remarked about his classmate and close friend, Senator Morrow, father of Mrs. Col. Lindbergh of New Jersey:

"An amateur in politics—thinks his constituents should be taken entirely into his confidence. Well, if he tries that, it will result in a Democrat being elected in New Jersey."

Mr. Beatty's article, in the April Cosmopolitan, entitled "The Calvin Coolidge Nobody Knew," was also that far from being "tight." Mr. Coolidge was one of the most generous of men. Although he protested to Attorney-General Sargent when he learned that some one had been cutting wood worth a couple of dollars on his ground in Plymouth, Vt., he wrapped with his own hands a Christmas package containing $100 in gold for his friend, Lucey, Northampton shoemaker; and that when the principal bank in Northampton was closed suddenly on account of a defalcation of a department head (the bank has since been reopened, Mr. Coolidge passed on the interest as executive of the bank, an associate of his who had had all his ready funds tied up by the misfortune, and without saying a word to him, thrust a check for $5,000 in his hand with the remark, "You may need this."

MANY MERELY IMAGINE THAT THEY'RE SICK

Some Persons Always "Sick" But Do Not Really Die

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D.Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Psychology.

Every person knows at least one other who goes from doctor to doctor, who always seems to be sick or who doesn't actually die and somehow appears to make a go of it.

I am referring, of course, to the type of individual popularly designated as the hypochondriac.

Although it is true that the hypochondriac resorts to physical pathology to account for his complaints, he is often extremely conscientious, and for this reason it is assumed that his illness is all a matter of imagination and nothing is really the matter with him, it is equally true that the hypochondriac is not he himself claims, entirely misunderstood.

For surely no one wants to be sick; nor is it any fun running around to a lot of doctors swallowing pints of medicine and subjecting oneself to all manner of tests and treatments. Furthermore, if the illness exists in the imagination only, is it not equally true that something is wrong with such an imagination?

Physicians who have specialized in nervous disorders have realized for years that hypochondriasis is a real disease, not an artificial one, supposed. Structurally the patient is quite normal, but the mind suggests to his mind as well as to his bodily organs.

Functionally there is, however, something decidedly wrong, and this functional disturbance, this group of maladjustments may be summarized in the diagnostic term "neurosis".

A neurosis is nothing like an insanity and hypochondriac do not go insane. They may, however, suffer as much or more than the individual harassed by delusional ideas of persecution. The result of it is that hypochondriacal ideas seldom receive any sympathy from others.

One must assume that if the neurotic with so-called fancied ailments could overcome them, he would. For the trouble really is in his unconscious mind; not his conscious thinking; and neurosis is so deeply repressed that he remains wholly unaware of what is the real way he does. What there may be in his experiences of the past that could possibly account for his symptoms.

The particular ill or ills, about which this variety of neurotic continually complains are just as real, however, as if the disorders were of organic origin. In other words, a pain in the back or chest feels like, and actually is, real pain, in spite of the fact that the doctor has considered are intact and sound, so far as structure is concerned. Only this pain, or whatever the neurotic symptom may be, is conditioned by causes that lie buried deeply in unconscious thought processes, the symptom in itself being a symbol—which, incidentally, the specialist can discover—of the thought disturbances which are responsible.

Nothing is gained by "reasoning" by telling such a patient to forget his troubles, or by trying to convince him how ridiculous his fears really are. The mental attitude of an hypochondriac cannot be altered so readily.

Assuming that the patient is right is a much more constructive way of aiding such an individual. Only in this way is he encouraged to consult an expert in conditions such as his, for the treatment always should be psychological.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

Chancer Elliott the famous athlete and hockey referee, died in Kingston on the 13th instant, aged 37 years.

A terrific electric storm, the continuation of the one which passed over this district at midnight, burst over the city at noon, about two o'clock this afternoon. Every building in the city shook, because of the terrific crash of the explosion of electric fluid. The fire alarm was sounded and crowds rushed to the streets. It was reported that the tower of the city hall had been struck. Broken bricks and mortar encountered on the building. The whole centre of the south face of the clock was smashed and thousands of pieces; the hands were torn from their place and buried to the roof of the main portion of the building. The whole interior of the tower between the four dials was wrenched and the clock proper stopped work. A huge section of the main supports was torn out and the wires leading to the clock were melted off. It is thought the steel flagpole attracted the lightning.

Mr. Cooper braced himself against some beams and was able to hold on until the cost was torn from his foot. OPPOSITION MORE BITTER

Railway Bill Due For a Stormy Passage Through House

Ottawa, March 15—(CP)—Opposition to the new railway legislation in the House of Commons seems to grow in intensity and bitterness as the days go on. When the motion on second reading of the bill, which implements the report of the Royal Commission on transportation began it appeared assured of a comparatively easy passage.

The first Liberals who spoke on the measure were critical of certain features of the bill but did not condemn it outright, some Conservatives took about the same attitude but few even on the opposition side announced an intention to vote against the measure.

Now the Liberals are practically unopposing the debate and every speaking one another in defending the bill. No Conservatives spoke yesterday and Wilfred Hanbury, Liberal member for Essex-Tecumseh, added all previous opponents of the measure, when he linked his criticism of it with an attack on Premier R. B. Bennett.

The Prime Minister, he charged was a dictator, and in his manner of discourse resembled Napoleon and the former German Kaiser. It was unfortunate that he should look to a railway dictatorship as a solution of the problem.

Parliament, however, said the Pacific coast member should be guided by the larger business considerations than the mere object of securing the support and interest of railway shareholders and bondholders. It should reject this attempt to set up a railway czar, which was bound to mean loss of employment and lower wages to railway workers, impaired service to the public and the tearing of the railways and rivalries without transportation.

Small groups of parliamentarians gathered in the lobbies, discussing the sudden death of Sir Henry Thornton while debate continued in the House on the government legislation to place the management of the Canadian National Railways on a new basis.

Debate was featured by a prosecution of Liberals protesting against the Government's Transportation Bill. Hon. Peter Veniot, former Postmaster-General, in his first important speech since his defeat after a series of illness, sounded a maritime note of warning. "Hands off the Intercolonial", was its effect. Under the bill, the Board of Governors could scrap the Intercolonial, he said, and the Maritimes would have no court of appeal.

Gorman, Black Hawk Coach Tangles with Referee and Takes His Team off the Ice Argument Comes Over Scoring of Goal in Overtime

FORFEITS GAME

Maroons Win City Title by Downing Canadiens 2-1

Toronto, Mar. 15 (CP)—Something new went down on National Hockey League records today as the Boston Bruins were credited with the first forfeited game in many seasons, the aftermath of one of the wildest of Boston's many wild games last night when Tommy Gorman waved his Chicago Black Hawks from the ice after he had tangled with Bill Stewart, referee, in the overtime period at Boston had a 2-1 lead.

The game was a climax to a tense game. Boston, fighting for the league's American section lead with Detroit, had tied the count at 2-2 until late in the third period when Eddie Shore, defenseman and marcher extraordinary, tied the score with two goals in the closing seconds before the end of the third period.

Threat into overtime Shore started the play that brought the rumpus. He drove scarcely a melee around Goaltender Charley Gardiner whirling sticks, Marty Barry put the puck in the pocket and the battle started. The fans rattled around the goal judge, digesting the goal and Art Coulter's protest that he waved the wire netting at the goal-judge.

Referee Fights

Gorman left his place on the bench to argue with Referee Bill Stewart. The pair had to be separated and until separated by Boston players, Stewart ordered Gardiner to his dressing room and police had to force him to leave the playing area. When he did, he waved his team out with him. Boston was awarded the game but the action left it a tie for group leadership with Detroit.

Until Gorman left the bench he received a report of the affair Boston fans created when Eddie Shore and McKenzie had given Chicago a cocoa! bout-period lead on a pass from Roger Jenkins. Shore had skated Gottselig to another in the second period and Gottselig had taken a spill and the overtime free-for-all.

Pitted against the lowly Ottawa Senators, Rangers failed to keep pace with Boston in another overtime struggle as the Texans wound up with three goals to their credit. Bert McInenly and Bun Cook scored for Ottawa in the first two periods before Baldy Northcott came to Boston's rescue with two quick goals that tied it up in the second.

Earl Robertson got a pass from Danny Cox for another Ottawa goal in the third period but their lead was short-lived when Babe Siebert again started a scoring play which Earl Seibert, Butch Keeling beat the rebound and passed to Art Somers for the finishing shot.

City Title to Maroons

Montreal Maroons eked out a last-minute decision over Canadiens to take the city title. Stoney Smith again led the Maroons to victory, his second period goal matching one scored by Marvel Rolph in the first and his pass to Glen Brydson in the last minute brought the game-winning goal. Baldy Northcott aided Smith to his first goal. Maroons won brought them within two points of the group-leading Toronto Maple Leafs and gave Canadiens' chances of taking a firmer grip of the third-place play-off berth.

TWO GAMES ARE CARDED

Both of Trenton's Teams Will be Seen in Action

Two more games are scheduled to be played in the Belleville and District Hockey League tonight when the Frankford team meets the Trenton "A" entry in the opening game at the Trenton arena and the Trenton Intermediates battle the Stirlings from the Belleville Cliff Dwellers in the night-cap attraction.

In the opening game the roster of the home team is somewhat in doubt owing apparently to quality as neither club have announced the signing of any players. In the Trenton city sheet, the Frankford entry will again be built up on the foundation of the bustling brothers, the O'Malley brothers, who carried the ball of the work along with Rattan and Finnigan last season when the "Millers" made things interesting for Trenton.

A year ago the critics ignored entirely the Trenton sixteenth, who was also holding his own in fast company. But this season they have made the acquaintance of such brilliant performers as Harvey Jackson and Aimé Morel, who look as sufficient to bring any young man ruby-the-ice.

Long, driving legs and a deadly shot pushed Northcott to the top of the Maroons' list of scorers early in the campaign, that is nearly early in the season, but he left wing-ed off, becoming the terror of foe treatment.

Knocks and Boosts

Two weeks from Saturday the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association will be held in Toronto, at the Royal York, where the resolution now in hand-ed option some fifteen years ago. All indications point to a large number of the executive must be in attendance, including Dr. Hardy, Bill Snyder of Hamilton, and Charlie Querrie of Toronto, to promote and change to the constitution and by-laws must be filed before that date as well.

According to a recent bulletin released by the association all affiliated Intermediate clubs are requested to hold their re-organization meetings before March 31 so as to appoint their official delegates to the provincial meeting. All associations and leagues are earnestly requested to be represented at the annual meeting of the O.S.A.A.

During the fifteen years of its existence the O.S.A.A. has succeeded to one of the largest sporting organizations in the province and is recognized as such today. At present there is a special need of another representative on the executive of the O.S.A.A. from Eastern Ontario, and the name of Earl Seibert has been suggested. Earl has had but one active member on the executive, in the long list of big leaguers. R. A. Elliott of Delora and a past president of the association is a member but he is not an active executive but the bulk of the work is left to the secretary, Mr. Kay, who incidentally we wish to congratulate upon his wedding event in the past. On the other hand there is absolutely too much work to be done and for the sake of organization, etc., in the east for one man to handle. Quite naturally all leagues in Eastern Ontario will be pleased to see Earl carry on his endeavors in the past have served the senior ball situation in the east.

Just who the leagues in the east would nominate as their prospective candidate for the executive has not been taken up carefully by them and it is going to be a hard matter to study the situation. The position, although it is one with the old adage of "he's got plenty of time to do the work" is brought to bear the fundamental need of benefit in the east is a man from either of Bill Kay, who will give the time and work that is needed. The O.S.A.A. has always been realize that Eastern Ontario needs association, and the ability is there for ranks if the cause of baseball is to be benefited in the east. Ottawa should not be bestowed, provided he is elected, upon one for more consideration than any in

HOME CANNED TOMATOES CAUSE OF BOY'S DEATH

Mother And Sister Recovering From Illness

London, Ont., March 15—(CP)—Botulism, contracted through eating home-canned tomatoes, is held responsible today for the death of 11-year-old Ivan Oesch, Zurich village resident, and the illness of his mother and sister, Mrs. Susan Oesch.

The boy's mother died yesterday, two days after he was stricken with the strange illness. His mother and sister, affected at the same time, have been treated with a special serum rushed to them from Kansas City via aeroplane and automobile, and at present are under the care of Dr. A. J. McKinnon.

Mrs. Oesch and her son had eaten the tomatoes on Thursday and daughter Ivan last week, with the daughter had partaken of the vegetable Saturday. Only Clarence Oesch, one of the family, passed up the dish, expressing a distaste for it.

Beauty .... By Helen Jameson

Subduing The Oily Complexion

Why the human nose must cook up an ambition to outshine other features nobody knows exactly. Eyes should glisten with animation, lips should be sweetly metal. But a respectable, well-behaved nose is supposed to carry a dull finish, be unobtrusive. Yet the commonplace of all beauty ills is the beaming proboscis. It is the support of the powder chemists, and consumes millions of powder puffs every year. What's to be done about it?

Excessive complexion is caused by sebaceous glands that never take time off, but must pour out their lubricating fluids to excess. The why of that is a mystery. Some skin specialists claim the source of this condition is in some glandular disturbance. Others place responsibility upon diet deficiencies. And that's those! The less, a woman can do is to resort to measures that have been found helpful. Measures, we say, because if one treatment does not help another may. She should try all of them in the hope of quieting her disturbed soul, displaying a face that is a credit to the cause of pulchritude.

Soap may be at fault; the oily-faced ones depend upon it for their beauty salvation. Some soaps are not easily rinsed away. If sudsy deposits remain, they add their beans. When even the blandest soap is used it should be removed with fairly hot water, since cold water isn't.

into the flesh, a habit which is general among the pretty dollies. It is forced into the pores, sebaceous glands rebel, work harder than ever. Put more faith in the astringent, less in powder, watch for cheerful beauty tidings.

In the matter of diet, the average individual eats more starches and fats than the body requires. These foods stimulate sweat and sebaceous glands. Live mainly upon lean meats, fish, fowl, green salads, vegetables and fruits. Milk is a beauty food.

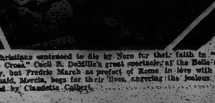
The Beauty Box

(By Helen Follett)

If the anti-shine lotion is blessed with good proportions there's no reason for her registering beauty waits. She has only to consult the show girl type. Men assume a pleasant protective attitude toward the cutlet, those ducklike who can wear youngish clothes no matter how many birthdays have been chalked up to their credit, who are inclined to be peppier than their taller sisters. After the age of nineteen there's no hope of increasing stature. But by waiting tall, carrying the body beautifully, the short gal will appear to add to her inches. She, or all types cannot afford to let shoulders slump forward; chest cave in, back bend the wrong way.

face with cold water, lave with a lotion made by combining equal parts of rubbing alcohol and witch hazel. Go down fats, . . .



When you sit down . . . sit up. Slumping in the chair is a lazy habit, ruinous to the contour of the figure. Sit far back on the chair seat. Let the backbone curve in at the waist line, permit shoulders to fall easily and naturally. Rewards will be yours.

Powder and rouge are handicapped in their beautifying efforts when the surface of the skin is dry and flaky. If you belong to the "dry" contingent, cleanse the skin thoroughly with a thin cream or oil before plitting on the synthetic trimmings. Remove the lubricant by wiping the skin surface over and over again with a bit of turkish towelling or tissue. Pluff on the powder lightly then the rouge, then powder again. If a creamy rouge is preferred, omit the first powdering.

One application of cold cream on tissue oil won't achieve a thorough cleaning of the complexion. Two are required with careful removal, after the first. After the age of nineteen there's no hope of increasing stature. But by waiting tall, carrying the body beautifully, the short gal will appear to add to her inches. She, or all types cannot afford to let shoulders slump forward; chest cave in, back bend the wrong way.

To cure enlarged pores is a long term beauty chore. It means changing the texture of the skin which can't be done in a few weeks or few months. Treatment consists of massaging at night with a heavy cream, lemon, salads, lean meats, plenty of vegetables, and don't forget fruits. Important beauty rule: six glasses of water a day.

A change of diet will do much to cool blackheads and pimples to depart. Cut down on fats, starches and sweets. Drink fruit juices, eat green salads, lean meats, plenty of vegetables, and don't forget fruits. Important beauty rule: six glasses of water a day.

Sixty Christians sentenced to die by Nero for their faith in "The Sign of the Cross," Cecil B. GOOD MANNERS
By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

HANDS OFF

I'm sure you'll agree that it is rare, very rare you any of these most unpleasant habits! Watch yourself, for if you have, it would be difficult for even not to, part of the divine manner.

From the beginning, love and material advantages seem to have been at war. As someone has said: "When mathematics come in at the door, love flies out of the window". Even though we have many reverse versions of some proverb. The worldly-wise have said that it's just as easy to fall in love with a rich man as a poor one, and vice versa—with this. But is it, really? The experiment has been tried often enough. Heaven knows, and found wanting.

Love is no respecter of pocket-books, rank or common prudence. And isn't the seat of falling in love with someone, when everyone begs you not to, part of the divine mechanism?

Love thrives on opposition. It might even be called an obstacle race.

Love—real love—is always and everywhere an overflowing of the heart—the surge of emotions that move under a compulsion as strong as that which compels the moon and tides to operate together. The very soul of love is spontaneous—the complete surrender of self in a great devotion.

Calculation, caution, forethought, taking account of the consequences—these are as far removed from real love as spoiled Cora-meet-Johnson.

The girl who keeps track of benefits received, with the cold eye of a small shopkeeper ringing up sales on a cash register, is not in love.

Neither is the lover who weighs balances and reckons advantages likely to accrue from marrying this and that girl, who has been favored by fortune.

As Israel Zangwill, that gifted playwright and novelist who died all too soon, has said: "Not everyone is capable of loving."

Some people do very well with makeshifts. They contract prudent marriages. They are in love with love, and they hang their affections on any convenient peg. Again, they become victims of fascination, which proves to be too thin a veneer for the wear and tear of daily life.

Under impulses over which specialists are still quarrelling, people marry almost total strangers because they are lonely.....and remain lonely to the end.

To love profoundly implies a kind of genius. It is no great a possession that no power on earth can completely control it. It is as divine a gift that no one can wholly earn its secrets. It cannot be commanded, and it is too often given where it is not asked. A thousand profanations of its holiness cannot defile it.

And yet love, which is stronger than death, for it is not destroyed and intended.

Why Does Love Thrive So Well on Opposition?

STOCKS GAIN 1 TO 8 POINTS

Securities Markets Surge Upwards as Trading Resumes

By CLAUDE A. JAGGER

(Associated Press Financial Editor)

New York, Mar. 15.— Securities markets surged upward enthusiastically as trading was resumed today.

The quick resumption of free and unrestricted dealings in securities was a bright contrast to the months of blight and restricted dealings in which trading was started again after the last important closing, coincident to the outbreak of the war. Many stocks gained 1 to 5 points, notwithstanding the closing of the last half of February. While the market bustled, the dollar was firm. Sterling exchange moved up again in the early afternoon to new high levels of recovery.

Case and Owens Illinois Glass registered substantial gains in a public sale while advances of 5 or more appeared in such issues as American Commercial Alcohol, Chemical, United States Steel Preferred, International Harvester, Consolidated Oil, Pacific Coast, Pacific Coast Preferred, Pacific Gas and Electric, Norfolk and Western, and Macy.

LIKELY WOULD BE THE FIRST TO RALLY ROUND

Glasgow Students Follow Lead Set By Other Universities

Glasgow, March 15—(CP Cable)—Glasgow University students today followed those of the Oxford Union, and the Glasgow Union, by declaring not to bear arms for the British Empire.

Male students of Glasgow University today defeated a motion, that they would be prepared to fight for the King by a vote of 324 to 586. The meeting was held in the open air, 2,000 members by girl students, who were not allowed to vote.

When the Oxford Union first went on record against bearing arms for the Empire, there was a storm of protest. Unperturbed commentators however point out that similar motions have been passed for many decades but that as soon as the first bugle sounded and the need was urgent the students were among the first to "rally round."

"SIGN OF THE CROSS"

Spectacle upon spectacle, magnificence outdoing itself, Cecil B. DeMille's "The Sign of the Cross" opened its Belleville engagement at the Belle yesterday, and left the large audiences to a vivid picture of pagan Rome in the days of Nero. Many believed and steadfastly contended, that the day of the spectacular had passed with the advent of talking pictures. It remained for the master of the spectacle in the silent days to prove that sound had only served to intensify the thrilling effectiveness of this type of entertainment.

Here is presented the most lavish pageant of Rome in the time of Nero, and upon the most elaborate of all the most colorful period in Roman history.Here is the dramatic contrast between the Christian maiden Mercia and Romans and the humble, hidden Christians, and the magnificence of the one hand the wicked Empress Poppaea, in the "voluptuous bath of asses' milk; on the other, the Christian girl, Mercia, maintaining her faith in the midst of torture among the people of her faith.

And here we have Ursus' to the whole spectacle, is the Circus Maximus with its chariot races, combats, its wrestling matches between black men and beasts, and the thrilling battles between amazons and ghasts, and its featured event—the feeding of Christians to the lions. Ursus, a short, by an unforgettable performance of his part adds much to the suspense and passion and mimicry.

Once more, in the days of "The Ten Commandments" and "King of Kings", enormous crowds will before the cameras, and once more, DeMille is difficult to imagine a more undisputed master of crowd effects than the great scenes and the scenes laid in the Circus Maximus are unforgettable and will remain in the memory of all.

In its cast also "The Sign of the Cross" merits extravagant praise. It is difficult to imagine a more perfect Nero than Charles Laughton's. Fredric March as Marcus is the typical Englishman portrays the cruelty, the lewd madness of Nero and yet maintains an absolute semblance of reality and sanity. Elissa Landi as Mercia. It is a performance that will go down on the screen role of honor. Ian Keith as Tigellinus.

As the cruel scoundrel, Poppaea, Claudette Colbert is also responsible for a performance of unusual brilliance. Others in the cast who were trampled and shoved to their death in the panic that followed.

Today, less than a week since their arrival, they have completed a memorandum of intervention for submission to the conference, a document outlining the disarmament proposals most favored, and upon which discussion will then rage hotly.

Once more, in the days of "The Ten Commandments" and "King of Kings", enormous crowds will before the cameras, and once more, DeMille is difficult to imagine a more undisputed master of crowd effects than the great scenes and the scenes laid in the Circus Maximus are unforgettable and will remain in the memory of all.

In its cast also "The Sign of the Cross" merits extravagant praise. It is difficult to imagine a more perfect Nero than Charles Laughton's. Fredric March as Marcus is the typical Englishman portrays the cruelty, the lewd madness of Nero and yet maintains an absolute semblance of reality and sanity. Elissa Landi as Mercia. It is a performance that will go down on the screen role of honor. Ian Keith as Tigellinus.

As the cruel scoundrel, Poppaea, Claudette Colbert is also responsible for a performance of unusual brilliance. Others in the cast who were trampled and shoved to their death in the panic that followed.

Flames shot from the roof of the building when 20 girls, seven men and a boy were burned. The highly flammable contents turned the fashionable building into a blazing inferno.

Mrs. Mary Ryan, 40, was burned to death when she leaped from a window to escape the flames.

Firemen fought their way into the building and carried out the bodies of the dead and dying.

Twenty-one persons were in hospital, many in a serious condition and firemen fighting among the ruins for the two missing.

When the Hull fire department was called to the home of Mrs. Balanes followed the trail, parents of Lawrence Hill Wards managed to the factory anxiously peering between the windows. SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

These warm contentions failed to daze the visitor perceptibly.

"I read in the Herald that you came here to study, and that's what you began, when he finally allowed her an opportunity to get in a word or two.

"Yes. She's usually in the papers. She counts that day lost when she isn't."

"There have been several references to her engagement."

"Which one?" Spencer chuckled.

"To Mr. Lee Sam Lee. I happen to know him."

"Oh! Indeed!" The Talker found his interest distinctly aroused by the line. "Friend of yours, is he?"

"No. There was a report ... "It's true, then?"

"I'm—it is little premature, possibly."

"You're probably wondering why I'm here. Frankly, I don't know myself. Sam and I were at college together. He brought him that I came to Paris, to study. I mean it's—it's all right in every way, but my people were unable to send me. They're not in sympathy with my ambitions anyhow. Sam's father is rich—do you know why he's over here? Why he quit college?"

"I haven't the faintest idea."

"I think you ought to know. He was expelled."

"What for?"

"Over a girl. It was in the papers and you must have read it. If you were in New York at the time."

"Possibly I did. I don't seem to remember what they said about me, but it was considerably hope that you didn't come here to tell me that Sam was a college cut-up. That's nothing against him."

"No, I didn't come here to tell you that; cannot say I am sorry."

"A part of what?"

"Well, I have been newspaper clippings, I thought...."

"Don't show them to me," Wayne said indifferently. "Now, let's understand each other. Sam and I are man and I talk plainly, I cut corners. What have you got on him?"

"Why—nothing. It isn't that. We were actually good friends, and as well he asked me to marry him. He did really."

"I see. And you have his letters. Very well, I'll consider it a proposition. My daughter has made up her mind and there's no stopping her. Those letters are worth as much to me as to a newspaper. What's the figure?"

The caller was both offended and insulted. In her indignation her face grew white. "I'm no blackmailer," she protested. "You're selling. I read in the papers that he bought your daughter a necklace and about his winning a fortune at the Casino and flying all over Europe and everything....Western heiress is ridiculous enough to be married young American. It made me laugh."

Wayne was crying Miss Starr with silent intensity now. "Yes? Well—make me laugh. Is that funny about it?"

"I'll show you...." With shaking hands the speaker ripped open her purse, seized a bundle of folded clippings and tossed them into Wayne's lap. "There's your heiress to young American; your future is son-in-law. Maybe you know all about him and maybe you don't." to him and to smile in a cordial

The man adjusted his glasses, unfolded the clippings, then his expression changed. He stared open mouthed as what he saw; his cheeks began to tremble. "Lee Ting. Lee Sam. Lee Sam Lee. Paris. Palace of Imperial Bounty." Grandson of Western University." There were pictures of a dark-haired girl and of Sam: sensational headlines. He leaned back and read much of the story. He had no interest in it.

"My God!" he exclaimed. He shot a look of loathing at the woman in the caller, then he put the clippings in his pocket, rose and tramped about the room in agitation. Others were followed she flung herself forward with a reckless rush.

She wore the same dress she had worn that morning at the beach: it was the only one she had on, and soon her token in the same costume she had seemed to have changed her mind about quacting. She carried a severe look under her arm or what looked like one—in reality it was a leather riding crop—her face was stormy, against its under-lying pallor her tan stood out curiously. It was like a thin brown veil beneath which her agitation was visible.

She came towards Sam like an arrow and when their eyes met he stiffened—in her dreadful pronunciation smote him. He turned suddenly pale—like Cassius, he was no coward, but a wretched, humble cringing at the evil. And he saw in her expression correctly, for he had been told it became on many other occasions, for instance, on that night in the roadhouse with Alice Jepson and her friends. Usually it was a masked, people tried to conceal it but not Alamia. Like a luxury garment all Sam's confidence all his recent pride was snatched away from him and he stood naked.

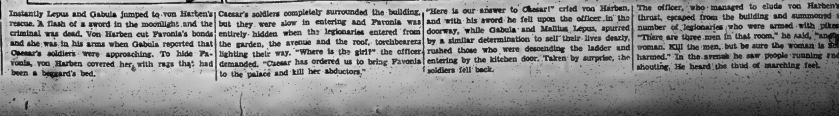
Mothers Advice Helps Girl Regain Lost Energy

Her Housework a Burden Until Backache Relieved By Dodd's Kidney Pills

Toronto, Ont., (Special)—Any girl who is in good health many years, will find that helping around the home and family is quite a task. How fortunate then is the woman whose household duties become a feeble burden, due to illness.

Such was the condition that confronted Mrs. D. Cross, of 216 Gilbert Avenue, in telling how she finally found relief. Mrs. Cross says:—"I can highly recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills for kidney trouble and other associated troubles. I had my back and could hardly do my housework. A friend told me about Dodd's Kidney Pills and I got a box at once. After I took the first box I felt like a new woman. I always keep a box in the house now."



Thousands of grateful people have publicly testified to Dodd's Kidney Pills. Why not benefit by their experience? There is no reason at all why anyone should continue to suffer terribly. Dodd's Kidney Pills can be obtained from druggists everywhere.

TARZAN AND THE LOST EMPIRE—No. 83

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Instantly Lepus and Gabula jumped to von Harben's rescue. A flash of a sword in the moonlight and the criminal was dead. Von Harben cut Favorita's bonds and she was in his arms when Gabula reported that Caesar's soldiers were approaching. To hide Favorita, von Harben covered her with rags that had been a beggard's bed.

Caesar's soldiers completely surrounded the building, but they were slow in entering and Favorita was entirely hidden when the legionaries entered from the garden, the avenue and the roof, torchbearers lighting their way. "Where is the girl?" the officer demanded. "Caesar has ordered us to bring Favorita to the palace and kill her abductors."

"Here is our answer to Caesar!" cried von Harben, and with his sword he fell upon the officer in the doorway, while Gabula and Mallus Lepus, spurred by a similar determination to sell their lives dearly, rushed those who were descending the ladder and entering by the kitchen door. Taken by surprise, the soldiers fell back.

The officer, who managed to elude von Harben's thrust, escaped from the building and summoned a number of legionaries who were armed with pikes. "There are three men in that room," he said, "and a woman. Kill the men, but be sure the woman is not harmed." In the avenue he saw people running and shouting. He heard the thud of marching feet.

Washington, March 16 — (AP) — Representative Carl M. Weideman (Dem., Mich.) asked the Conservators of the First National Bank and the Detroit National Bank of Detroit today to replace any Canadian citizens employed in the two institutions with American citizens.

Letters were sent by Weideman to Paul Keyes and S. C. Schraus, conservators of the two banks, saying he had been told there have been Canadian citizens employed in both banks in various capacities.

"Inasmuch as millions of American citizens are unemployed at this time and are in dire need of employment, I request you to examine the employment rolls of your respective banks and determine who are citizens of this country and those who are not."

ODDITIES IN THE NEWS

Madison, Wis., March 16—(AP)—There will be no signs "Negroes Not Wanted" in Wisconsin barber shops.

The beauticians said they would let the barbers do keep end of their specialties. The bill was not enforced.

PRICE SURGE SPREADS OVER ALL BOARDS

Wheat Climbs Five Ct. Limit in Chicago, Big Gain in Winnipeg

STOCKS UP $1 TO $3.

Canadian Dollar Firms, Canadian Exchanges Follow Wall St.

Winnipeg, March 16 (CP)—Wheat, rallying from 2 3-8 to 2 5-8 cents higher around the noon hour today on the result of heavy buying by Chicago interests in this market. Reports of Commons Agricultural Committee. An inquiry is being conducted into the milk prices, especially.

The Guaranteed Pure Milk Company had its beginning in 1886, said Mr. Hogg. Farmers had a constant market in his company, a premium of three cents a hundred pounds above the basic price of 12 butter fat. In 1923 the average milk bought had a butter fat content of 3.7, an increase of 0.2 per cent. 2 cents a hundredweight above the basic figure.

Two prices were current in the Montreal area, Mr. Hogg said, determined by the dairy association in conference with the producers, and the present price of $1.46 per cwt. 1923, 11.8 per cent of all milk purchased by the Guaranteed Pure Milk Company was bought at a surplus price.

No Control Over Supply.

"It is not possible for anyone in the dairy industry to control or regulate supply", said Mr. Hogg.

Often conditions brought about an over-supply, continued Mr. Hogg. Over-year to surplus milk as they fluid, but sold through any regular channels of sale but at a price for cream or used in the manufacturing of butter. All milk received by us as surplus is used in this manner and none ever sold through regular people producing channels.

Each month, continued Mr. Hogg, the total volume of milk received was distributed among the farmers on a per-rata basis.

Turning to prices to consumers, Mr. Hogg emphasized nine cents a quart, paid by the householder, was not the price at which all milk was sold. Minimum prices were charged to hospitals and schools.

Under Inquiry.

Less than maximum prices were secured from restaurants, retail stores and other classes of trade.

"Owing to this," proceeded Mr. Hogg, "the average price was considerably less than nine cents a quart."

William R. Tummon (Cons., Hastings-South) asked Mr. Hogg if the Montreal milk inquiry had been ordered during the Wall Street slump. Mr. Hogg replied in the negative.

On the "Standard Mining Exchange after the Wall Street slump were bewildered and then firmed again around yesterday's levels.

Chicago, March 16.—(AP)— All grains jumped the limit for one day's trade on the Board of Trade, opened after a two week's holiday today.

Wheat, following fairly strong foreign markets, prevailed while the American marts were closed currency, gained the limit of five cents at the start with pandemonium of shouting and waving of fingers and signals making the pit in a maelstrom of frantic motion. All other grains were active at the opening as much as the new limit was allowed.

May Wheat touched 53 7-8 cents the limit 3 cents, then declined sharply over the close on March 4, and less than 2 cents a bushel above that prevailed to the extent of $677,564,100.

4.339 CENTS PRICE SPREAD IN MILK SALE

Milk Probe Told Distributors "Compare Notes"

$1.46 CWT. PAID

W. E. Tummon, M. P. Queries Witness on Stand at Probe

Ottawa, Mar. 16 (AP) — George Hogg, president of the Guaranteed Pure Milk Company of Montreal, appeared as a witness today before the House of Commons Agricultural Committee. An inquiry is being conducted into the milk prices, especially.

The Guaranteed Pure Milk Company had its beginning in 1886, said Mr. Hogg. Farmers had a constant market in his company, a premium of three cents a hundred pounds above the basic price of 12 butter fat. In 1923 the average milk bought had a butter fat content of 3.7, an increase of 0.2 per cent. 2 cents a hundredweight above the basic figure.

Two prices were current in the Montreal area, Mr. Hogg said, determined by the dairy association in conference with the producers, and the present price of $1.46 per cwt. 1923, 11.8 per cent of all milk purchased by the Guaranteed Pure Milk Company was bought at a surplus price.

No Control Over Supply.

"It is not possible for anyone in the dairy industry to control or regulate supply", said Mr. Hogg.

Often conditions brought about an over-supply, continued Mr. Hogg. Over-year to surplus milk as they fluid, but sold through any regular channels of sale but at a price for cream or used in the manufacturing of butter. All milk received by us as surplus is used in this manner and none ever sold through regular people producing channels.

Each month, continued Mr. Hogg, the total volume of milk received was distributed among the farmers on a per-rata basis.

Turning to prices to consumers, Mr. Hogg emphasized nine cents a quart, paid by the householder, was not the price at which all milk was sold. Minimum prices were charged to hospitals and schools.

Under Inquiry.

Less than maximum prices were secured from restaurants, retail stores and other classes of trade.

"Owing to this," proceeded Mr. Hogg, "the average price was considerably less than nine cents a quart."

William R. Tummon (Cons., Hastings-South) asked Mr. Hogg if the Montreal milk inquiry had been ordered during the Wall Street slump. Mr. Hogg replied in the negative.

On the "Standard Mining Exchange after the Wall Street slump were bewildered and then firmed again around yesterday's levels.

Chicago, March 16.—(AP)— All grains jumped the limit for one day's trade on the Board of Trade, opened after a two week's holiday today.

Wheat, following fairly strong foreign markets, prevailed while the American marts were closed currency, gained the limit of five cents at the start with pandemonium of shouting and waving of fingers and signals making the pit in a maelstrom of frantic motion. All other grains were active at the opening as much as the new limit was allowed.

May Wheat touched 53 7-8 cents the limit 3 cents, then declined sharply over the close on March 4, and less than 2 cents a bushel above that prevailed to the extent of $677,564,100.

May Corn jumped the limit of 2 cents to 37 3-4 a bushel, also the limit of 4 cents to 31 but Oats did not at once rise the limit of 3 cents.

Abandon Fear, Cultivate Confidence, is Plea of British Premier at Geneva to France and Germany

Reduction of French Forces One Third is Proposed

Britain's Plan in Figures

Geneva, Switzerland, March 16—(AP)— Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, presenting a new plan for peace and for the maximum limit set by the Treaty of Versailles.

The armies of Italy and France would be reduced to the same number, he proposed, but France would be permitted an overseas force of 50,000 men for her colonies.

This would reduce the French army about one third.

No maximum was suggested for the British army, nor does the plan include any attempt to limit non-European armies.

Britain's effectives would be fixed at 50,000, Hungary's at 60,000 and Bulgaria's at 40,000.

The French "Alpine" troops are fixed, up. Poland 200,000; Rumania 150,000, Czechoslovakia 150,000.

Russia would be given 500,000 men.

The plan would extend the London Naval Treaty to include France and Italy. It also would extend the naval holiday on capital ships to all powers except Italy which would be permitted to build one ship to balance the new French Cruiser Dunkirk.

Germany would be freed legally from the naval restrictions imposed by the Versailles Treaty, but actually her naval power would be fixed at the present level until 1936.

This proposed Treaty would remain in force for five years. During that period special International Commissions would be created to attempt conciliation and settlement of vexing political problems now distracting Europe. A second general Arms Conference would be held before the expiration of the five year period.

Man Like Nation Who Expects Entire Satisfaction is Nothing But Plain Ordinary Fool, MacDonald Declares

PROPOSED REVISION OF TREATIES

Britain Would Eliminate Air Craft in Warfare Providing Security is Found Against Use of Civil Planes in Wartime.

GENEVA, March 16 (AP)—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, today told delegates to the World Disarmament Conference that if there is to be international peace the armed nations must contribute to disarmament; the unarmed nations must contribute to confidence, security and goodwill.

Prime Minister MacDonald was presenting the new British disarmament project evolved in the course of his efforts to restore the confidence to a decisive action.'

Calling Germany by name, he declared that "recent events and speeches" have not helped those seeking to establish peace and justice in the world.

He quoted with approval the German assertion that "either Germany be given justice and peace, or the world is going to destruction."

These must be contributions from France and the other armed powers, he told the conference, and also from Germany and her defeated war allies if the efforts to attain disarmament and triumphantly are to succeed.

The problem of disarmament is largely psychological, he declared.

Pose to Please

"Put fear into my heart," he said, "and I relapse into the old attitude of mind. I have been doing so from a pose to please my colleagues."

"The sky is very cloudy now," said he, crushing allusion to the German situation, "but the duty of the statesmen here is to create an atmosphere which will dispel the clouds."

"My friend, Nadolny (Germany's representative) wants to know what he is going to say for what he proposed the British Premier. "My friend Daladier (the President of France) also anxious for peace says: 'I am ready to surrender military security as soon as I receive some kind of security which will make me feel safe.' I say the same."

"The British plan which I am going to propose, therefore, is not entirely nobody," he warned. "Whenever four or five people are gathered together—be any meeting of 50 or so —he man who thinks he is going to get full satisfaction is the biggest non, ordinary fool."

Then, he began an exposition of the plan evolved by the British. It has the fourfold aim:

"First, it would restore for a fixed period of five years, the relative strength fixed by the naval treaty. Third, it provides for supervision of its execution—by the League of Nations, if you like—but by some authority over restored to prepare figures, and these figures are not unalterable.

The British plan proposes abolition in the navies of lands and heavy mobile land guns, prohibition of bombing aircraft and of chemistries, abolition of military and naval aircraft provided international agreement guarantees protection against the menace of converted civil aircraft.

"But commercial aviation," said Mr. MacDonald, "must not be disregarded."

Respecting signatories of the naval treaties of London and Washington, the British plan stipulates that these powers must maintain their engagements, and that all naval powers must hold a disarmament conference.

Battalion of Swordsmen, Stripped to Waist in Cold, Hew Down Japs

Peiping, China, Mar. 16 (AP) — Despite the withdrawal of Chang Hsueh-liang's forces from the military overlord, Chinese troops are continuing an active resistance of Japanese invasion of Jehol province. Pass through the great wall, one hundred miles northeast of here.

Both Chinese and Japanese sources confirmed this fact today.

Defense of the pass is in the hands of General Sung Shoh-Yuan, formerly one of the strongest fighters serving under the banner of the Christian General, Feng Yu-Hsiang.

General Sung's 20,000 well-equipped troops include a brigade of swordsmen, stripped to the waist, and some of China Kai-Shek's best divisions to pierce during the Kuomintchun revolt two years ago.

These forces now are harassing the invaders with repeated night raids under the cover of the great wall.

Delayed Chinese despatches reached here said that a battle began last Thursday when the advance of Wan Fu-Lin, former governor of Heilungkiang province, moved from Kuancheng, twenty miles north of the great wall, with the Japanese in pursuit.

Sung's army at once began a forced march to the pass. Upon reaching there, a picked battalion of swordsmen, stripped to the waist, despite the intense cold, made a night attack along the top of the wall. Japanese machine guns were silenced. The Japanese were driven off to the hills just outside the pass.

SIR HENRY IS LAID TO REST

Great of Railway World Pay Final Tribute to Beloved Man.

New York, N.Y., March 16—(AP)— Many of the leaders of the Protestant Episcopal Church were held in St. Thomas' Church on Fifth Avenue here this afternoon for Sir Henry Thornton, formerly president of the Canadian National Railways.

The dead of the railway world of Canada, Great Britain, the United States and the bright lights and debutantes of society joined to pay final tribute to Sir Henry, as much revered and loved by the humblest of workers as by executives whom he impressed by his railroading genius.

Lady Thornton, widow of Sir Henry, sat in the front pew of the church. Near her were two hymns, "Fight the Good Fight" and "Praise My Soul the King of Heaven," the latter sung as a recessional by the male choir of the church.

Later this afternoon the body was taken by train to Trenton, Ont., where it will lie in state in the village of Newtown, where Sir Henry spent part of his early youth. A private service was held there interment.

COMMISSION TO SUPERVISE ARMS PACT

Britain's Attempt to Get at Numbers of Effectives

CRACKLING SOUND

Geneva, Switzerland, March 16. —(AP)— Delivering an announcement generally regarded as intended to reassure France and Germany for abandonment of the latter's rearmament, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, laid the newest British disarmament and security plan before the world disarmament conference.

The plan would reinforce existing security pacts, including the Briand-Kellogg Pact and by setting up an International Commission to supervise disarmament agreements.

The plan includes an effort to determine the numbers of effectives for conditional disarmament. Heretofore this attempt is made with regard to non-European countries, with no numbers provided for Great Britain.

Outstanding contributions to peace from both armed and unarmed nations, Mr. MacDonald warned in his address, will be attempt is made with regard to non-European countries, with no numbers provided for Great Britain.

MacDonald Meets French Premier on Disarmament

Hitler of Germany May Sit in on The Conference

HOPE FOR NEW LIFE

(By George Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Geneva, March 16 (CP, Cable)— First of the steps between Europe's leading statesmen expected to culminate in a secret four-power parley on Disarmament and Security today when Premier Edouard Daladier of France met British Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald.

The two discussed the trip which Prime Minister MacDonald and Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary, are to make to Italy this week-end to confer with Premier Mussolini—but how and when France and Germany will join the United Kingdom and Italy in the proposed parley is uncertain, but it is regarded as likely that Premier Daladier and Chancellor Hitler of Germany will sit at Signor Mussolini's villa and Mussolini not long after the British-Italian conversations have concluded.

Premier Daladier and Premier MacDonald talked at the Anglo-open attention in the light of events in Germany. The secondary of Hitler's Fascist forces in Germany is the chief weapon in the minds of the French at the moment.

Meanwhile Prime Minister MacDonald today laid before the general commission of the World Disarmament Conference the new British plan which the British delegation hopes will pay new life into the deliberations for perpetuating peace and halt martial talk in Europe's capitals.

The British plans was believed to call for co-ordination of disarmament proposals already accepted by the conference and to aim at a middle course where delegates are unable to agree.

60 P. C. FARMS MORTGAGED

Ottawa, March 16 (CP)— The average farm mortgage in Canada amounts to $1,785, Dr. H. M. Cassis, Dominion Statistician, told the parliamentary committee on banking and commerce today. Only seven provinces reported. The farms were mortgaged, leaving about 60 percent free.

For seven of the provinces, Dr. Cassis gave the percentage of farms mortgaged as follows:

Ontario, 41 percent; Manitoba, 42 percent; Saskatchewan 49 percent; Quebec 32 percent; New Brunswick 32 percent; Nova Scotia 15 percent; and Prince Edward Island 33 percent.

Presenting his figures from the 1931 census, Dr. Cassis showed there were 726,000 farms in Canada, of which 60 per cent. or 435,000 were mortgaged to the extent of $677,564,100.

This figure applied to "owned" farms only and not to "rented" farms which were rented. Of these there were 74,283.

A provincial police circular was received in the local police office this morning advertising a substantial reward for the apprehension of Harold Pappa, age 36 years, height 5 feet 8 inches. He is rather dark of complexion and has a dark moustache.

Pappa was born in Sicily. His wife but has been selling the Great Salada Tea products for years. The charge of arson arose out of a serious fire in Frontenac County last June 15. It was a contract in West Sunday's winds of asphyxiation, quality and softness, and melting ice on the streets, with a few robins reported chirping in various sections of the city, and with a high mark of 54 above being reported on the thermometer at the local weather office, however, with a bright sun and clear skies, only a trace of rain fell in the air. Temperatures were given as 34 high and 20 low on Thursday.

SHIPPING WILL NOT OPEN EARLY

Although shipping on the Great Lakes is officially opened for navigation the next three weeks, the spring opening of the Port of Belleville will in all probability not be earlier than it has been in previous years, according to the opinion of the Harbormaster, Robert Condy.

Not until some time in April is it expected that the first shipments by boat will leave this city.

It was announced by Harbormaster Condy that although the season had opened officially last year and for some years before, shipping in any quantity did not get under way till long afterward. Cheese factories had not yet started their season's work, and coalers, which are the industries the main shipping from this point, had not been unloaded in sufficient quantities at the dock to make the trips a paying proposition.

WOOD IS CUT BY PARKS BOARD

Firewood from the large decayed trees and branches that have been cut down in various sections of the city during the past few months under the direction of the local Parks Board, is finding its way into the fireplaces of the citizens belonging to the needy of the city.

With the cutting down of the trees the work of cutting the wood into stove lengths is being carried on by a gentleman who has charge of where the wood is drawn. The wood in turn is handed over to the central relief bureau for distribution.

"We are cutting it in the park," explained Mr. Chas. Symons, chairman of the board, "because many families of the city are not able to cut it themselves. Then, too, there is less waste of the city wood by not being given to them as fast as it is being cut."

MOUNTING OF RELIEF COST

Protest Over Issuing of Vouchers, Open System Sought.

Belleville taxpayers were warned of mounting relief costs at a meeting held by the Belleville Labor Association in the city hall Wednesday evening.

Channel, it was claimed, by Mr. R. B. Hall, principal speaker of the evening, and president of the association, that the present method of the administration, and alleged the various ways in which relief is being handled, is costing the city a change in the present system will be sought through a petition which was signed by a majority of the one hundred or more in attendance, composed for the most part of those who are now on relief. This will be presented to the city council at their next meeting.

The petition which was circulated and signed calls for:—

A change in the present method of administration of issuing on relief, which are good at specified stores only, to the "open system" of vouchers, which may be taken to any store entitled to redeem them.

The petition also favors the reduction of the present rate of relief now running. That the small, independent store owner should be benefited with the change in the city council store in the city.

The petition sets forth the claimed disadvantages under which the taxpayer of the city is forced to contribute to the upkeep of those on relief,—also some benefits that would accrue if the foregoing changes in the present manner of handling many phases of relief, such as fuel orders, certain grocery orders, light, and rental orders.

It was alleged by Mr. Haldree that the Relief Act, which governs the administration of relief in all municipalities in Ontario, is not operating in the city or Belleville and that several sections of the printed act were being ignored or bypassed by officials of the Central Relief Bureau.

A specific instance cited was that of the three months' residence clause. Applicants, who have been refused relief owing to the fact that their residence in Belleville had been less than six months, it is said, were refused illegally, as the amendment to the Act, which was passed in 1932, is two years.

That a certain man on relief in the city had been sent to a wood dealer in Hickory, was made. This man, it was claimed, was offered wood which had been made by the man, it was said.

The grocery orders which were read by the speaker showed a difference in prices charged than the purchases made at the two different stores.

Two independent grocers of the city were also present and addressed the attendance, voicing dissatisfaction over the present system which operated against them in handling vouchers, and urging that unless something did soon be done by means of the petition all were asked to sign.

The absence of Mayor Tice, members of the council, officials of the Central Relief Bureau, and taxpayers generally, was scored by the speaker.

65 Years Ago Tonight Upper Bridge Swept Away by Flood

Sixty-five years ago tonight at eleven o'clock the steel upper bridge was swept away in the most disastrous flood of St. Mohn's Island history. A reporter writing in the Intelligencer at the time recorded: Those who saw by the dim gas-lights the great bridge, the pride of the city, a change in the present system will be sought through a petition which was signed by a majority of the one hundred or more in attendance, composed for the most part of those who are now on relief. This will be presented to the city council at their next meeting.

Ice jam in the river at the foot of Bridge street, which has been causing considerable anxiety to residents of the lower part of the city, cleared away this morning and the water is now flowing freely. The jam was caused by the heavy ice floes coming down the river and piling up at the bridge.

Damage to Lower Bridge

In this search of the angry Moira's raging torrent on that fateful night the upper bridge was quite heavy, Bleecker's dam was a wash-out. The cribs were bulkhead and the wheel gone. Irwin's sawing machine factory and Cannon's woollen factory suffered the loss of the loss in the wall and the side was almost gone. Bleecker's carriage, Baker's carriage and blacksmith shop and warehouse were damaged and lumber was carried away. Below the house of Mr. Rankin was a wrecked in more shell and a good deal of loss was caused to Mr. Heinbuch's home. Washed in the living room of a Mr. Brown's house to the depth of two feet. Below this from Irwin's factory to the Henderson Building piled with ice from four to eight feet high and Church and Pinnacle Streets were converted into ice fields. The swirl of waters carried away most of the sidewalks and fences and left only a few solitary stones of the stone piers standing. Even where once the upper bridge had been. The fence leading to the Walker foundry was a complete wreck and the building owned by Messrs Wallon, Bennight and Gleason showed signs of the passage of the flood, and some machinery damaged. Above the road east bank of the Moira suffered heavily and below the lower bridge the properties of Whitefoyd, Weeks, Clark, Connors, Thompson, Colebrook, Henry and Ridley were also main sufferers.

Mass of Wreckage And Ice

From the asbery to the farthest docks and beyond the Flint lumber yards was one mass of ice, sawlogs, fences, buildings, barrels, scows, fragments of machinery, chairs, chicken coops in endless array. Boat houses had what crushed in, schooners were lifted up on the debris, wharves were torn away. The wharf the steamer Rochester was moored on was battered and dashed against the timber and the mill and foundry as well as a large number of buildings on that side were inundated.

On the west side of the river the Pringle Sash Factory lost a portion of the plant as an end was torn out. Stapley and Diamond factory was damaged and the Tennessee and Beddick mill was wrecked, the whole force of the jam having been struck here with great force, ripping the lumber and removing the wreckage as well as breaking up the pieces of ice.

It now appeared that the upper bridge was swept down stream in one piece, it struck the corner of the lower bridge and swung around, bursting it from its lowly bed and woken and it appeared as if a good portion of the bridge remained standing.

In this same year damage was caused at Bridgewater, (Actinolite) when the bridge was carried away, and the Foxboro bridge was also damaged. The jam at Plainfield had formed here and fears expressed for the Lotts dam. At Tweed the bridge was finally laid and stone to prevent its being carried away.

Rain During Day

On March 16th, 1865 the waters of the river and mill Street usually an idle moment of reaching the bay. In spite of all the danger no accidents occured though some hogs who were on the planks and mill near the upper bridge narrowly escaped with their lives when the mill gave way. Just as it was going over one of the hogs jumped to the land. She fell as the mill gave way and it was thought that she was carried away with the debris but he succeeded in holding to the bridge and thus escaped. Rain fell heavily during the day and night, the cause of the storm with which this story opened.

SUSPENSION RAISED ON THREE STUDENTS

Board Allows Them to Resume Their Classes On Monday.

The three students of the Picton Collegiate Institute, who yesterday suspended for alleged intoxication during the Literary Match between Picton and Trenton three weeks ago will resume their classes on Monday morning, according to Dr. Ketcheson, the chairman of the Picton Board of Education, who was commended with today. Asked if the parents of the boys intended taking any action against the Board of Education for the disciplinary measures, Mr. Wright replied that they "stated none was contemplated". "Of course" said Mr. Wright, "we are not interested in the charges that have been laid against the Trenton youth, which, I understand, is one for a breach of the L.C.A."

A thorough investigation has been carried out by the Principal of the Collegiate Institute in Picton and also by the police in Trenton. It is alleged that three students became intoxicated at the basketball match and that the liquor was supplied by a Picton and a Trenton Township. Chief Bain of Trenton stated that no charges would be laid.

PROGRESS TO FIGHT DEPRESSION

Editor Ontario Intelligencer,

May I again crave space in your valuable paper to urge the necessity of public enterprises to provide work for people who are being dependent by so-called relief.

The new President of the great Republic to the south of us, is preparing a great construction and reconstruction scheme at a cost of a billion dollars, in order to provide employment for the working classes.

I have been called a dangerous individual, because I have advocated a liberal use of our domestic currencies in order to make our current prosperous and to ensure some relief for the unemployed.

Yet it is commonly known and acknowledged, that we have not enough currency in circulation to keep the ordinary channels of local trade and enterprise, and there will soon be no little to delay the ordinary costs of government.

That idea, born foreseen by such far-seeing men as Senator Beveridge, Yet Senator Meighen recommended the inflation of gold reserves which assembly must result in development of our natural values in the foreign exchange markets of the world, while our gold production (silver, nickel and copper) could be restricted to domestic use.

This month only reach in the increases of the amount of gold values in banks and our Federal Treasury, and he or no value towards the encouragement of the enterprise, and people, of the increase in their buying power or their ability to pay taxes.

No country is more prosperous than the great country of the United States, because it is the working man's dollar that buys the products of the farm, pays the rent, and consequently pays the taxes.

Much has been said of, and hoped for, from the possible cancellation of war debts to the United States, so much so, that the ordinary individual has got sight of the fact that although the United States government guaranteed the loans, money of the capital was supplied by the private citizens.

The United States Federal Treasury has, if any, better off financially than our own.

It has been estimated, and I think underestimated, that two hundred citizens of the United States are each possessed of over one million dollars per year. The average income has an average of less than eight hundred.

It was a combination of some of these great capitalists that in the greed for gold which they did not need; and which created panics, paying stocks and robbed the rank and file of their savings, that caused stock market crash, which disrupted trade and commerce throughout the world."

Today there is no constructive power except the family plot in Belleville.

Prosperity is not "around the corner" but "over the top of the hill" and we must climb in order to reach it.

ONE FOR ALL.

REFORMATORY FOR BELLEVILLE YOUTH

Six Months Sentence After Being Found Guilty.

Harold Cook, Belleville, who was found guilty of a charge of causing a public disturbance when he appeared in last Friday's police court, was sentenced to serve six months in the Ontario Reformatory when he appeared for sentence on Saturday morning.

It was alleged by the police that Cook has been forcing his attentions on a local young lady much to her chagrin. His Worship severely reprimanded Cook for his actions before he meted out sentence. His Worship also stated that Cook was a fit and proper subject for deportation in his estimation.

The conviction was the third registered against Cook on a similar charge over a period of three years.

Conferences to Save Europe from Throes of New War

New Order of Alliances Being Framed as Continent Tenses

LITTLE ENTENTE

(By the Associated Press)

Talk of war and of armament races silenced temporarily in the capitals today whilst the heads of older nations were gathered together to try to avert threatening clashes.

Undoubtedly, within the next few months ago might have passed almost unnoticed, crowded fast and complete.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and his Foreign Secretary, Sir John Simon, will talk Saturday in Rome with Premier Mussolini in the Duce's first international conference in eight years.

Premier Daladier of France, hastened to Geneva last night to see the British statesmen again after parleys with them last week end. His decision, made suddenly, was the announcement they were going to Rome.

Unconfirmed reports in Rome said Adolf Hitler of Germany, may join the Mussolini-MacDonald conference while attempts to confirm this in Berlin, brought only denials in response that "anything might happen."

Final Arms' Offering

Mr. MacDonald has a disarmament plan drawn up as a final offering to break the deadlock in the international efforts to seek an agreement for reduction. Disarmament was officially reported as the subject of the conferences between the various premiers.

Just unofficially a widespread belief is voiced in Geneva, and London, that a new order of European alliances, such as that which preceded the Great War, is being organized. French press comments also are openly seeking an understanding with Great Britain even the United States calling it "Democracy" against "Dictatorships."

British leaders, such as Winston Churchill and Lloyd George, of opposing political faiths, warn that unsettling British government chief took to come from what they term "Alliances" and not to discriminate between Germany and Germany. Herbot of France, protested in an interview in a newspaper against that British charges, France is militarists are wrong.

Czechoslovakia View

Replying to a parliamentary question, Defence Minister Czerny declared Czechoslovakia—France's ally—on Germany's eastern frontier, considered that he "has full confidence in the army's power of defence." The "peace of Central Europe is at stake" was quoted by Minister Czerny.

Poland, another nation in close association with France, and Germany have considerable military forces, threatening crisis involving the free city of Danzig, and the Polish corridor—concentration in the Polish corridor is reported. Any disturbance in the border military garrisons will be reduced to a minimum.

The three activities of Hitler's Nazi storm troopers and the Stahlhelm in Germany, the Iron Front troops of Hitlerites gaining control in Austria and similar activities in other countries has their neighbors worried. France has been active in her efforts against consolidation of Nazi troops in the Rhineland, it is reported.

Italian deputies launched a broadside yesterday against the alleged "Hitlerite" activities in Austria and Rumania. These two countries and Czechoslovakia have formed recently their Little Entente. Hungarian newspapers have been active in opposition of reports that it included a plan for drilling Nazis in Austria and country and received a flat denial.

INCOME EXEMPTIONS LIKELY LOWERED

$2,000 and $1,500 Believed to be Maximum Exemptions

Toronto Telegram in a despatch from Ottawa says:

"The forthcoming budget will wipe out the $3,000 income exemption such things as books and shoes, including rubbers, shingles, biscuits, creosoted railway ties, yeast and some kinds of fertilizer. All present these articles are subject to the 2% sales tax and that an exemption of $6 per cent. is allowed on the amount paid.

"It is expected that there will be still further decreases in the income exemption, which at present stands at $1,500 for single men and $2,500 for men with dependents. The latter may be reduced to $1,000 and $2,000 in these respective classifications."

Will You Help?

To the Sports Editor:

Dear Sir—

At a good meeting of the South End Athletic Club, held on Monday night, the subject of the Girls' basketball team came under fire, as their financial finish, was discussed and the following motion was taken down:

"We, as club, carry on as usual, for the furtherance of all amateur sports, therefore the meeting votes the sum of five dollars to the girls with the hope that in a very short time other organizations will come in and they can go to Toronto and bring home the bacon." I am sure the amount is not more, but being hurriedly formed (but we are not very well financed).

Enclosed please find check for $5.00 which is for the use for towards helping put Belleville on the sporting map.

Yours faithfully,
Charles Jeffs, Sec.,

NEED FOR PRAYER

During the past year the Canadian Prayer League has developed from a purely local effort, confined to the City of Toronto, and its environs, to a Canada-wide movement, with prayer groups in every Province of the Dominion.

A letter from his Worship, Bishop asking for prayer cards and literature for the use of the clergy for the great need in this time of perplexity, and depression, for prayer and declares his purpose to encourage prayer groups in every parish in his diocese.

The movement is based on a simple pledge and involving that the promise to devote at least fifteen minutes a day to prayer for Canada and church "quickening," and "revival" and the speedy coming of Kingdom that leaves sectarian differences in the secret places.

There are now prayer groups in every Province of Canada, extending from Halifax in the East, to Victoria in the West, representing a great tide of prayer, which is a sentence to the command, "Man ought always to pray and not to faint," is pleading continuously for the outpouring of God's Spirit.

The body of Christian laymen heart of the movement, and representing the various denominations, co-operating with the clergy. The big encouragement of this daily habit of prayer among the people, is having the direction of the groups of their churches to which they belong.

Prayer cards are available, along the line of the movement's aims are obtainable from the office of the Canadian Prayer League, 85 King street west, Toronto.

BREAKS ANKLE ON ICY ROAD

Mailing House of Robt. Simpson in Trenton is Entered

Trenton, March 16. (Special) Monday night and Tuesday morning were according to old timers about the worst weather in years. Traffic was tied up for hours and the weekend was spent in Trenton after arriving seven hours late. Many trucks dared not venture up Trenton's long hill going south.

Many pedestrians managed to get up hill or two but only one serious accident occurred.

The police took the injured lady to the hospital in Belleville and as soon as the fractures, assisted by Dr. Reid, were reduced Miss Donnelly is resting as well as can be expected.

NEW USES FOR RUBBER

Men's shirts that never lack buttons, because they need none, feminine corsets of different varieties, and garments that elastically fit the figure,—vari-colored glasses that bounce instead of break!

These are some of the new products that are about to come upon the market from American rubber factories heretofore specializing in auto tires, toy balloons, and other more familiar rubber articles.

Rubber is making a bid as a textile, asserts Watson Davis, managing editor of Science Service in a trweekly feature (Washington). He says:

"The combination with cotton, rayon, etc., it is being used to make a stretchy new yarn. For garters and girdles it seems to be an ideal material. For shirts and shorts it is replacing buttons that give trouble on the person and in the laundry. Men may soon expect to be able to have shirts with elastic cuffs and a stretchy insert lengthwise so that they can get into them without buttons to fumble. Lastex is one trade name of one rubber-textile combination, elastons of 'elastic' and 'latex,' the form in which rubber comes from the rubber tree.

"Once hard rubber, 'vulcanite' or ebonite, made by mixing rubber with a little more sulphur than is used in the pliable sort of vulcanized rubber of tires, etc., was the principal synthetic material for combs, fountain pens, hairpins (when they wore them). Synthetic resins of the bakelite type usurped much of the hard rubber field, and then they marched on to compete with glass and chinaware.

"Rubber is now invading this application also. A new plastic compound of rubber, tasteless and odorless, resistant to heat and scratching, c'assed as unbreakable, with lower costs claimed, is being offered. It will be made into dishes, household appliances, and containers."

BOGS TELL SECRETS

A favorite form of execution in the 'good old times" was to sink the victim in a swamp.

If the executioner was kind-hearted, he sometimes gave the victim a clout on the head to make him unconscious of his living burial, or thrust a merciful knife between his ribs.

Old folk-tales tell of these ways and manners of our simple and forthright forefathers, but the bogs themselves are now yielding up not only the bodies, but the very clothing, shoes, hats, ornaments, etc., that were buried with them.

Not all the bodies were of those who were executed, for the soft swamps were easy and convenient burial grounds, and some of the graves were lined with moss by loving hands.

The preservative virtues of peat swamps have long been known. It is in parts of Germany that the bodies and clothing of men who lived early in the Christian era are being recovered from these bogs.

The textiles that are still extant are almost exclusively of wool. Sometimes it was soun fine, sometimes twisted so smoothly and strongly that it shines like silk, sometimes coarse, loosely woven and knotty. The warp threads are twisted toward one side while those of the weft are twisted toward the other side, which made the fabrics resemble in a way that have a real "samnle-card" of early Germanic weaves, including linen two-ply fabrics, rectilinear twill and zigzag twill, sizgag and striped drill. The woven edges are often put on artistically; the bindings in small dicpatterns have the purple dye in a lozenge design (Macrame work). In spite of the probably simple looms, fabrics of a width up to nearly two yards can be woven.

ICY HILLS

It has been suggested that on occasions such as the present, when the city roads were very slippery and the walks were dangerous with the icy coating of freezing rain, the public works department should make special effort to have men, even extra men if necessary, being called in, to sand the roadways on the slopes and hills first of all, because pedestrians could utilize the roads until the department had opportunity to sand the walks. The work should be done at the very earliest possible in the morning.

Monday night from about ten-thirty onward the walks were also very slippery and this condition continued throughout the night and a portion of the morning.

It would seem reasonable that with idle men it would be possible to secure a number of helpers in the distribution of sand or cinders on the roadways.

Fortunately because of the extreme care taken by motorists and pedestrians, very little incident out of the ordinary resulted.

"The first thing you must remember," began the pro, "is to keep your eye on the ba'l. "Gee!" replied the American, "you Scotch are too dogoned mean for anything. D'ye think I care if I lose one?"

A HAPPY HEART.

With a happy heart I would go on my way,
A heart without regret,
A heart that can love for a night and a day
And then forget, forget!

For there is no grief like a heart that clings
To the joys that are past and through.
That dwells in the dreams of other springs,
In the dreams that could not come true!

So I ask always for a happy heart,
A heart which with song overflows,
And holds no thought of the thorny smart,
Remembering only the rose.

For a light and happy heart I pray,
Which owes to the past no debt;
A heart that can love for a year and a day
And then forget, forget!

MANY MEN AND WOMEN in public life have highlights in their lives which they like to look back upon with pride, but few can claim the honor of having benefited science to the extent of one million dollars. The recent death of a Canadian physician in New York City recalls the fact that through him a wealthy friend gave one million dollars for surgical study. Dr. George David Stewart was one of the foremost surgeons in America, who had served as president of the American College of Surgeons and was Professor of Surgery at the New York University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College died last week in his seventy-first year, of uremia. He was born in Cumberland County, Nova Scotia, December 28, 1862, attended Tesches' College at Truro, and St. Francis Xavier College. In 1889 he received his M.D. degree at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City. In 1890 he married Miss Ida M. Robb, of Antigonish, Nova Scotia. Dr. Stewart was an intimate friend and personal physician of the late George F. Baker, banker and philanthropist. Dr. Stewart, in 1926, Mr. Baker made a gift of one million dollars to New York University, directing that the fund be known as the George David Stewart Endowment for Surgery, in honor of Dr. Stewart. The gift was to be used to promote the teaching of surgery at the university, and it was said at the time that the endowment represented one of the first steps in an extensive plan of development by the university's college of medicine and dentistry. A friendship that inspired a gift of one million dollars for the promotion of medical science is certainly an evidence that the rugged Nova Scotia doctor must have possessed high character and rare personal charm. Stewart went to New York City, a stranger in a strange land, and rose to the highest peak possible in his profession and won many friends. Perhaps he was not measured in money at more than a million dollars, for the gift of that sum did not signify that the debt of friendship was paid, but rather but a small installment—a mark of appreciation was it. Medical societies and hospital boards in New York paid tributes of regret at the death and appreciation of the life and achievements of Dr. Stewart, while the metropolis of Metropolis paid its quiet tribute to his worth. The New York Times in the course of an editorial testifying to the worth of Dr. Stewart, said that Sir Frederick Banting, who is quoted as saying that 'time spent on the knees in prayer will do more to remedy heart strain and nerve worry than anything else,' and that the man who does not worship God is not to be considered mentally fit.

"Now parch, does your chief pay you?" asked the latter.

"I get £300 a year. Twenty shillings a week in cash, and the rest in legal advice."

Before a man laughs at the awkward way his wife parks the car he should see himself sewing a button on his shirt.

TRAIN YOUR CHILD TO BE CONSIDERATE

Consideration For Others Should Come From Parents

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D.F.D., Famous Authority on Health And Personality

Strange as it may seem children are not by nature kind. In fact they often can be unbelievably hard to their pets and malicious to their playmates, while downright cruelty is far from being an uncommon trait in both sexes and all ages.

Children pinch, tease, poke fun at physical deformity, lord it over younger ones, call each other names such as poverty and economic and many other pranks which reveal their lack of consideration.

Selfishness is often a dominant and motivating factor. The instinct of self-preservation likewise, comes in for a large share of expression; and the ego urge—that force which sees the individual on to achieve at least a status of equality with his companions, if not a definite status of superiority—is found as the basis for many undesirable childhood acts for which we criticize them the most severely.

I do not mean to imply that children never reveal finer feelings, or that they seldom can be tender. Far from it! Children are such realistic—but the human animal still remains mighty primitive; that he begins life not unlike an untutored savage; that what ever considerations, if any, are manifested, because the parents and our educational systems train him like that.

A child quickly adapts himself to rules of conduct that yield some benefit to himself. He soon learns that stealing, let us say, is followed by punishment. He learns also that the expression of love for his mother elicits a response that is gratifying to the senses and that redounds to his own well-being.

Experiences such as these, as well as correction and scoldings and the like from parents or elders with whom he comes into contact, make the child express to greater or lesser extent his primitive and materialistic cravings.

At about the age of five, when reasoning begins to function effectively, the child's mental side helps decidedly to curb the more sordid unsocial part of his make-up. After a time he learns also—and that really is the high stake of civilized reaction—that there is a joy of pleasure to be gained by doing kind and even altruistic acts for which no immediate personal reward accrues.

The habit of consideration for others, which has come in for consideration. Mistreat a child at home or at school, and he will cry out in pain, and you may be sure he will not forget. Praise him for kindness and his pets, and soon will develop into a catty little girl or a bully boy.

In similar manner kindness can be established as a standard of conduct. A well-treated child knows how good it feels to have kind and understanding grown-ups looking after him, and he learns also that his pets and his chums display loyalty and respect to him better if he himself is not unkind and harsh in his behavior towards them.

His Honor Judge Deroche of this city gave an address on the Passion Play in the Methodist Church on Sherwood last Sunday.

The mock trial is over. It was held in the auditorium in the Y.M.C.A., and a large audience followed the proceedings with much interest and amusement. "Judge" A. C. McFye, alias Aldermen McFee, was the presiding judge and he was arrayed in full judicial robes and everything extras. The plaintiff, George Dulmage; the defendant, Charles Jones, and Mr. Fred Wheeler, one of the principal witnesses were all made up to represent "Colored Gentlemen" of Alabama and they truly looked the part. The trial resulted in Chas. Symons, Bridge Street, being found guilty of the larceny of a rooster the property of George Dulmage.

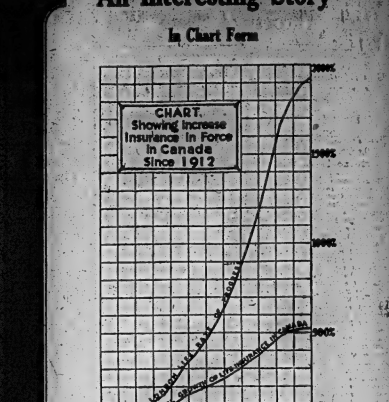
The Country Correspondent



(Toronto Star Weekly)

There appeared this week in Ontario papers a brief account of the death of an old citizen of Western Ontario. It was short enough, but it did not say so, a member of a large but seldom-mentioned class, a class which in most communities forms the decennial census or listed in the directories of Canadian towns for many years of his life the country correspondent to the local newspaper. From the little packet of letters which he left behind, and the bulging bundle of clippings from the budgets of news which in his years of service, must have amounted to thousands of columns in all, the items were no doubt trivial in their separate parts, but in the aggregate they were the stuff of things that people were talking about, the material which it seldom more than an era nowadays and wherever folks gather together in communities.

Metropolitan newspapers do not publish such items. In proportion to the nature of things, it is impossible for them to cover every happening, or even part of it which is closest home, in the minute way which is twice as papers in smaller centres of population do. The latter in their publication of "country correspondence" from neighboring villages and hamlets, are performing a service something which the big city daily cannot offer, and which papers in proportion develop this feature obtrench themselves in the affection of their readers.

To the country correspondent, serving often without pay, is an important man—important not only to the newspaper which he serves, but to the community whose goings-on he chronicles. The importance of the act of years do a great deal for it and for its people. Often he is a man of considerable ability (the present Lord Greenwood was the country correspondent of a Yorkshire paper while he was teaching school), but even more than the value of his literary talents are small, his record of events is eagerly scanned by the people of the countryside. City people are sometimes puzzled by the country paper's method of these humble chronicles. They may be interested to read today that So-and-so "Sundayed" on Mrs. Somebody-else, or that the latter's relatives in some stadem-beard-of-hamlet. They may be amused by a new motor car Yet if they will only stop to consider, they will find a part of thing that they talk of themselves, that is of interest to their people, the purchases of this one and the visits of that one, the doings of the other and the outing from time to time of the third, are the stuff that in large cities, is the bulk of conversation. Even the great talk thus. There is a story which is told which records the conversations of the great which they have had with nobody does not pay him for it and nothing is said about it on his tombstone. But he gets very close to the things that his home folk are interested in, and if he is often not a very great journalist, is at least a very real news-gatherer The local newspaper that employs an efficient staff of City editors and reporters has failed in a field in which no outside newspaper can compete.

The old-time horse doctor with a cigar, a walrus mustache—and pride in a smart stable—a whistling horse, of gold dangling from a heavy watch chain and his wife, a horse-shoe for a tie pin, and a strong smell of the stable generally. We must, therefore be careful not to be found to be the example we have in charge, even if they be children. We must avoid unkindness, and never resort we allow ourselves an overbearing or tyrannical attitude.

Here the question of physical punishment may come in for consideration. Mistreat a child at home or at school, and he will cry out in pain, and you may be sure he will not forget. Praise him for kindness and his pets, and soon will develop into a catty little girl or a bully boy.

In similar manner kindness can be established as a standard of conduct. A well-treated child knows how good it feels to have kind and understanding grown-ups looking after him, and he learns also that his pets and his chums display loyalty and respect to him better if he himself is not unkind and harsh in his behavior towards them.

THE SPARROW—

The cheerful chirping little Rug-by sparrow, known to be able to defend and care for himself in any street brawl with the other members of the feathered tribe, proves himself no match for the pugnacious starling whose numbers in this city day seem gradually growing. Reports an observer who also forwards the information that the starling seems to have developed new tactics in dealing with sparrows other than wherever they congregate.

For years and years the little sparrow has lived in undisputed possession among the crannies and gables in the city, and there had their nights been disturbed until lately, when startled by the dozen took up temporary possession of the upper parts of the building—keeping the early morning hours hideous with their intruding noise and mattress helps keep the bed warm.

Cities Service Eke Out Tie With "Imperials" of Trenton While Millers Beat Trenton B's

Green And White Had to Come From Behind to Tie

TRENTON STRONG

Frankford Displayed Hard Hitting And All Round Good Team

Mac Rigby's sole counter in the third period saved the Belleville Cities Service a beating at the hands of George LaMarsh's "Imperials" from Trenton in the night cap affair of the Belleville and District league, when the locals played the Trentonians a two all tie with the Frankford "Millers" scoring a 6 to 3 victory over the Trenton "X" team in the opening game at the Arena last night.

In the opening game, Fee, in the nets for the "Millers" stood out like a sore thumb and was literally deserted all and sundry efforts of the Trenton forwards, with the exception of Ruttan's solo counter in the first frame. No score was registered in this stanza of the hectic frame, while Jack Aiken on a beautiful solo effort helped the locals for the "Millers" in the second canto. Hunter duplicated this feat in the third frame for the Trentonians to knot the score only to have the Fraser brothers, Albert and George combine nicely to beat Anderson when the former secured the counter past.

With the two O'Malley boys, Bill and Charlie, on the defence, the "Millers" presented a hefty defence that proved hard to beat. Jack Aiken played exceptionally good hockey for the winners as did Finnegan, the youthful alternate, with the Fraser brothers also coming in for prominence in the final frame. Smith and Ruttan carried the brunt of the work of the Trentonians managed centre both on the defence and the offence. Smith, basketball star, played with the Danforth Jimmies in Toronto and showed the fans some fast pretty combination at times of speed. Mattis and High also played well.

The line-ups:

Trenton—Goal, Anderson; defence Smith and Ruttan; centre Lamore; wings, Dodds and Thompson; subs, Lemoire, High and Mattis.

Frankford—Goal, Fee; defence, Aiken and C. O'Malley; centre G. Fraser; wings A. Fraser and Wallace; subs, B. Martin, Sexsmith, B. O'Malley and Finnegan.

Referee—Jack Trudeau, Belleville

SECOND GAME

The eight-cap affair saw George LaMarsh's "Imperials" carry the play for the better part of the night and only the good work of Les Moe in the nets for the green and white clad Cities Service nets saved the day. The locals drafted Fred Bentley and "Wink" Wilson from Picton to bolster up their roster but the bulk of the rear guard work was carried by Sam Rigby, while Bill Sherry drew the occasional spurs. Again the "kid line" of Nicoll, flanked by Overt and Wilson out-shone the starring line of McMeekin, Pete Keyes and MacDonald. Of the first line McMeekin and MacDonald looked the best bet with Overt being the best of the lot.

Ken Begth, who coasted along the last bounds for the "Imperials" was undoubtedly the best man on the ice and was regarded for his efforts by scoring his previous goal of the night on a solo effort in the initial frame. Begth and Picton teamed up together, while the defence of Gord Bowen and York proved more than a stumbling block for the locals. Powers looked the best of the lot, while Johnson played inspired hockey at times. Both goalies worked well with Chambers out-shining Moe with his nimble saves, when he thwarted the efforts of the local forwards when goals seemed inevitable.

Begth opened the scoring in the first period on a beautiful end to end rush, when he beat the entire Belleville team for goal number one. The Trenton lad was shortlived, however, when Nicoll took a pass-out from Wilson and beat Chambers on a long drive. Begth then put the visitors in the lead during the middle stanza, when he took a pass from George Picton and coasted in on the unprotected side to flash the red light. The "Imperials" were forcing the play in the final stanza, when Rigby broke away, rounded the defence and blindly shooting one past Chambers for the tieing goal.

Both teams were very evenly matched and some new faces graced both line ups. Each of the Cooke outfits had two of his team's goals to his credit, Lalonde scored one on a pass from Pouseny and Coughlin, who tallied the other. The Rink Rats' sharp shooters were R. Jones and Langford.

Presidents Call!, March 16 (AP) —The Chicago White Sox are claiming no championship pennant but have their sights levelled confidently on a first division place for 1933. This is not such a modest expression, when it is considered it first of yesterday and the day before did not even dare hope for a place in the first division.

The change in the situation is based on the White Sox record, outranking athletes from Philadelphia and a return to health of two good pitchers.

Interest has been centred on Jimmy Dykes, Mr. Haas and Al Simmons. Mr. Haas—Al Simmons, just to be careful here, have been declaring considerable satisfaction from the showing of Bill Lyons, and Wm Frazier, who spent a lot of time last season on the hospital list will be in there doing a lot of effective pitching for the club.

The infield is not all that it might be, though a quality pechaps, but no quantity. With Manager Lew Fonseca at first base, Jack Hayes at second, Dykes over for short and Jimmy Dykes taking care of third, the infields of the latter infield record call has been sounded. Hal Rhyne is available for the utility role, but in the best major league circles one utility infielder is not considered sufficient.

If no infielders are added to the list, Red Kress, considered an out-fielder now may be restored to good standing as an infielder, although Manager Fonseca wants him in right field.

The outfield will compare favorably with the others in the league, while there are no catching worries in the camp.

WAGES INCREASED TO STANDARD OF 1931

25,000 Employees Are to be Affected By Increase

LONDON, March 16—(CP Cable) Twenty-five thousand employees of the Imperial Chemical Industries are to have their wages increased early next month.

In 1931 wage reductions were instituted representing £100,000 annually but Sir Harry McGowan, chairman of the Company, announced today the original salaries would be reverted to April 3. He declared the step being taken in recognition of the fine attitude adopted by workers when their salaries were reduced and in view of the helpful cooperation received generally from them since that time.

Sir Harry Adds, however, the improvement in conditions must not be maintained but would be dependent upon the volume of business enjoyed.

HAM IN HADES

Such a tasty Flavour

Ham in Hades, is truly appetizing. Easy to prepare too and so very economical, if you follow this simple recipe:

Take 6 slices of cooked ham, 2 teaspoon of Keen's Mustard, 1 tablespoon each of vinegar, salt and paprika, 1 teaspoon Worcester sauce, 2 tablespoons of fat. Mix the mustard, vinegar, salt and seasonings. Coat each slice of ham with mixture. Place fat in frying pan and when smoking hot put in the ham slices. Brown quickly to a delicate shade on either side.

A lot depends on that teaspoon of mustard. Be sure to include it and be equally sure the mustard is Keen's. Then your "Ham in Hades" will have a tasty flavour and the savoury, appetizing appeal that rightly belongs to it.

Waist Lines And Figures

In the placing of the belt, every woman should be an individualist. That exploding the antidotes is of prime importance. It makes or unmakes the feminine shape. Women who, in years past, didn't concern themselves much with this subject got a terrible wallop when the high mogul of fashion cut an inch narrow strip of fabric, tightened it around the normal waistline, and expected the members of the sisterhood to adopt the style willy-nilly, fat or thin, short or tall.

Then was when they rebelled. And the fashion leaders got the worse of it. They allowed that that the lady who wasn't built for a wasp waist shouldn't reveal the fact by strapping herself into a tight accordion. So they up and acknowledged that she of the rotund figure should not wear the normal belt but should wear it so that it appears to be at the normal line. Which means that the girdle must have more breadth, a lowered distance of the desired effect.

When a girl has a good waistline she is entitled to a bit of prideful showing up to form. The smart little belt was designed for her.

A trim waist may not mean that measurements are meagre, but that the equator is round. The famous Hip to Hip Jewett and Sherman is sticking to the backbone, but who has that shape? The smile that is larger than the cute whose torso is cylindrical. That's what the old time corset did for a woman; it made the waist look fragile, it was a horror, that old steel riveted affair, but it did make good shapes, which now is a lost beauty art.

Returning to the question of girdle placing, we must urge the sisters to settle the matter for themselves and to stick to their conclusions. The waistline should look definitely where the eyes line looks best, since it influences the whole ensemble, changes the character of the surrounding outline.

The high line is best for the woman with long body and short legs, but more than type she sits tall, not when she stands she is understand. By lifting the waistline, legs seem longer, proportions are better. Though the lifted effect won't go unless the abdomen is flat. The lengthening looks bigger and more the higher the belt is located. Our late lamented cherubic frocks, with the pillow under the bow, is blessing to thoughtless ladies who permitted their abdominal muscles to go slack.

With long legs and a short torso the rule must go a face about. Every limb that they hold high below the normal inward slant between lower ribs and hip bone promotes an attractive balance of the wonderful proportions.

The chief difficulty against adopting the present style of girdle is that evil of flesh which, even on women who are not particularly fat, bulges from below in the rib area. It can be hammered away if the seeker after slimness is persistent. Then, too, the combination of flesh between thumb and fingers, and the pinch method. After months of vigorous pummelling stand erect, feet six inches apart, chest lifted, body stretched; swing the arms in full circle, right circle. You will notice, that the arms are raised, fresh around the waistline tightening process.

Erect carriage is vitally necessary. Slumping tells the world and rules to take a ninety-nine year leasehold.

Your Gossipy Reads

You certainly want others to know when you do a good turn, don't you?

Of course you are rather acted in the way you do it careless sort of way—in connection with some story.

But you get it over and the fact that you mention it proves that you want it to be known and provided.

Is your giving done, then, with an unselfish purpose?

No, you haven't the right spirit, and so you don't get so much joy out of it as you might if you were modest and humble about it.

Something happens to that old heart of yours when you learn the burden of another feel as soon as you have told it even to one person, you have missed some of the happiness.

Your pleasure should come from the personal knowledge that you were permitted to do some thing to help those less fortunate.

You really learn a very different motive, for you want others to note that you are around doing good.

Many times you would not have done anything but you see that others are doing and you want as much credit as they get.

Why aren't your penuries and kind lest for the purpose of doing good?

An amplifier has been devised for telephone receivers, similar to those on radio sets, so that instead of asking any one to speak louder, the listener may increase the volume of sound in his own receiver.

WHEAT JUMPS 5 CTS. BUS.

Up to The Limit Allowed The Moment Trading Began

Winnipeg, March 16 (CP)—Quickly meeting buying orders, wheat jumped 5c cents a bushel at the opening of the new trading week today, the limit allowed under the rules of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. Cash wheat started today with Chicago traders keen for action, but the market closed today after a 15-day holiday, trading on the May option being limited to Winnipeg traders.

Nearing mid-session, prices were 4½ cents to one cent higher, May at 61¼; July at 61¾; and October at 59¾.

Following the booming five cent gain at the opening, wheat held within a range of ¼ cent of the initial quotations, and then moved slowly higher, caused mainly by Winnipeg buying. Reports of as much as 1¼ cents were registered, but these were beaten by the owner, caused mainly by reverse trading and prices were made for where they left off yesterday.

Moderate sales to Canadian wheat for export were made overnight, but these were not reported on the grain board sale.

Liverpool prices bounded upward today, according to the price gains reported here this morning. Liverpool was near the limit at 7-16d. and 1 d. higher. Buenos Aires wheat gained 4c to 8c higher.

Big Gold Shares Off From $8.00 to 1.50 in Light Trading

Toronto, March 16 (CP) — While the gold shares were quite indifferent to the movements on the New York Stock Exchange, they showed some weakness in sympathy with the rest of the list here today. Trading was light, with the latter noon volume of trading in the big mines reported at 2,000 shares.

While Nickel was advancing to a new level, Noranda declining at one time to a loss of 8, and Falconbridge and Sherritt were under pressure, Hollinger, Ford, Wabasso and Massey Harris were taken by Falconbridge, Sherritt, Bear Exploration, Lake Shore, Teck-Hughes and Sherritt-Gordon.

BANK ROUTINE NEAR NORMAL

By BASIL HARRISON

New York, Mar. 16 (AP) — The banks of the Walkers—and of all the rest of the country—clicking again today, energized not only by the flow of the United States Treasury itself but by evidence of reborn national confidence.

President Roosevelt, in speaking to the people of America on Sunday night, examined the mechanics of routine recovery for the rehabilitation of banking and in itself a heavy chore and might not be accomplished as swiftly as hoped for. The machinery of the job has been done, however, with even greater speed and precision than had been anticipated.

Such results reflected themselves today in these significant conditions:

1. Reopening of banks, closed by the National and state banking holidays, have recovered, most of them on an orderly basis.

2. Every section of the country has received a huge flow of currency from the Treasury's emergency stores.

3. Hoarding has been checked; a. Gold, hidden in fear, has been rushed out and returned to a free circulation; b. Currency issued by the Treasury has been received in sufficient volume to prevent its escape from useful channels.

4. Clearances of cheques on a national scale has been resumed on a basis of 75 per cent. Cheques drawn from hysterical withdrawal so reserved depositors.

5. Legislation has been formulated and put through Congress in record time. The public need have no future misgivings concerning its deposited funds.

6. Talk of scrip—a horrid word to normal people—has been completely been shelved as a general expedient of exchange, and has given way to the return of currency to circulation;

7. Dealings in commodities and securities have been resumed on a normal basis.

8. Business has begun to sit up and take notice.

Detroit remains one of the large cities still keeping its doors closed before its banking facilities can resume unrestricted functions. Michigan, however, has taken the step to a banking holiday, excepting Nevada, the only other commonwealth which was regarded more as a local matter than as a symptom of national conditions.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

The girl was saying something to him in a low, tense voice. Her color never had a woman been so pale! Her eyes were like stars. Sam did not understand her words, but their meaning filled him with a strange exultation. Every drop of blood in his body seemed to be pounding at his temples. His pulses throbbed like drums. Another sense than hearing was at work, for Sam's heart had stopped its beating. He felt as if he were dying.

Alanna's accusation came like a whisper: "You—you murdered him, Sam!" The man was brief, the action fatal. He had struck her but a moment ago, but that was simple in comparison. The act of cowardly vengeance, the sudden, heavy blow, stirred and startled Sam not at all. He had struck in self-defense. Through the silence Alanna's voice reached him: "I've got to tell! I've got to tell!" Sam knew that she was a started outcry, which came crashing through the pressed, inverted hand.

Sam took these blows without flinching. He had expected his head to be struck by a bullet. He felt the cruel, crushing force of the blow across his face, his neck, his arms. It stunned him, but it failed to hurt him. He was partially blinded by a spasm of pain, but his mind was clear, and even as the slim, iron frame went out of the fight between his shrinking hands.

Alanna flung the white head turned and writhed away with her best sigh, and her eyes flashing. A clutter of noises, rose and fell, and to Sam but he did not understand what they said. Presently Alanna cried out, astounded plainly, however, they seemed to be the result of his chastisement. There was a sudden, horrible, choking effort made, but not more than perfunctory assistance.

His left eye had filled him completely now and a strange numbness attacked his face. It felt like pain, it was wet, too, and he tasted blood whimpered. "Father! Father! What have I done? Oh, I've killed him! He's a Son of the Gods! His brain refused to believe the fact. Even more paralyzing was the crash of his dream world. Sam's fury died

One of the chief items of conversation when a number of the voters were gathered together was the resignation of Councillor Robert Wood. It is considered to be a fault in the near future and already one or two have been mentioned to run in an election they will be seeking municipal honors. The general opinion seems to be that this action at this late period is unfair and the affair should be settled without the excitement of an election and judging by the trend of the conversations it will be arranged in an orderly fashion. Councillor Wood always been of a most peaceable loving disposition and we feel it would be a crime to have the public know that Huntingdon had to have a by-election for one councillor.

PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED:

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED CITIZENS of the Great Dominion of Canada, bring a free and independent people, in whom resides the right of self determination, do hereby respectfully petition that Section of the Radio Commission of Canada in ordering or attempting to censor and delete from the radio broadcast radio lectures on matters pertaining to the study of public interest, and particularly the lectures of J. H. Brookbank, pertaining to divine prophecy. We have faith in the Bible as the Word of God and that it was written, for the instruction of man. Many sincere people believe that the Bible prophecies apply particularly to our day and bear direct relationship to the present world distress, and disclose God's remedy for the ills. We are entitled to hear these questions discussed, and to hear from all censor, otherwise our freedom is taken away Those who object, or who may be offended by such lectures, may turn their radio dials and decline to hear.

We therefore demand that the Dominion Parliament take immediate action removing from the Radio Commission the power of censor, hinder or prevent such lectures by radio, and that the people be left free to determine what they may or may not hear, and that world-wide students be entirely qualified to explain the Bible, such as we believe Brotherhood is, be helpful to the people, and we demand that our radio stations be permitted to publicly broadcast his lectures. In order that the people continue to enjoy freedom we shall a few men deprive them of that God-given right?

"THE OLD DOC"

By Francis Bragg Middleton

Young Dr. Lane sat fashing the prescription counter of the Big Drug On the Missouri-Kansas-Texas desk in front of him lay a pad of scratch. He looked at it in a state of mental confusion. He heard the voices of the farmers and the townsfolk, muffled by the heavy six-foot partition, jarring and bothering him.

He couldn't understand it, the surgery, the hospitalization, the examinations that had seized up on the countryside now that "The Old Doc" was dead. For that matter he never had been able to understand the hold which his old predecessor had exerted so long over the people's affections. For him "The Old Doc" had seemed to lack every requisite of a successful practitioner. He often had an unholy curiosity. He kept no books. His ways were random, unmethodical. He was, and if not actually soiled at least unmistakably unkempt. No one had ever seen him wear a white jacket. On the rare occasions when he had ever worn a white shirt or a pair of rubber gloves, he had immediately lost them. Yet his patients had seemed to like him. And for the new building for all his spotless office and spectacular array of gleaming instruments hadn't a look in:

"The Old Doc was always a kind of shed and barn like," came a scurrying voice over the partition. Dr. Lane frowned. Maybe that was it. Those yokels didn't know and hadn't the faintest conception of what was to be efficient, not something that was kind of shed and barn like. Well, hog shoe them a thing or two now if they'd let him. And they would.

He had to write "The Old Doc's" death certificate, just the whole county would know what he put in it, as he knew without being told. Yes how could he alter the fact that the old man had been found frozen to death by the roadside? A farmhand equivalent of "Dead from exposure and alcoholism in the gutter", was how they'd put it in other days.

But he half-to be careful. The local practice would fall to him precisely if he won local popular approval. And the people would expect a word of praise for the old practitioner. Him to that word. They had no patience with confirms. He'd have to use diplomacy. Yet how could he please the county and yet do violence to his every professional instinct?

But the voices beyond the partition had grown louder. And the doctor, weary of the turmoil in his own mind, allowed himself to listen.

"If he'd still been ridin' a horse it wouldn't've happened," he heard. "Machines like them is dangerous. A horse flesh when the show down."

"Haw. Progress is all right an' dandy in all right," in their place. But their danged ain't a slippery road on a dark night when a man's been up 'n' an' a night already. He recollect when my oldest, boy was born. The Old Doc'd've driven eighteen hours an' went home safety on the saddle. He could had old sure-footed mare of his she'd've packed him home all safe."

"Funny how them never got a bolt on him."

Dr. Lane jumped. Why, "The Old Doc" drank like a fish. He was loaded 'till the gunnels' most the car skidded and threw him out and he froze to death where he lay!

"He never liked liker much. Never set well with him. You know how some folks are. Some can carry it an' some can't. I recollect him when he was young. Spry as a cricket, pullickin' up an' down from one end of the county to the other. Day and night. Never turned nobody away. He never missed a call. An' when he had to go around half asleep on his feet he turned to his hoss or sorter buck him up an' keep him goin'."

"Well," slowly and solemnly, "the way I look at it, The Old Doc give his life for his rules, just like the man in the history books, only maybe a little bit more so."

And after that there was a long, portentious silence. Dr. Lane never dared could imagine how they looked, pulling his chair plugs and spitting at the stove. Well, whether by deliberate intention or not, they had served notice on him. They had told him what they wanted him to say, and he, the doctor, while he was willing to say it.

His lips were smiling a trifle wryly, but his tongue was not in his cheek, while he wrote:

"Died like a soldier in the performance of his duty."

GIRL OF 20 WHO WEIGHED 196 LBS.

Tells How She Took 50 lbs. Off AND IMPROVED HER COMPLEXION

Are you the young lady of whom people are remarking, "How she is getting fat!" or the young man who declared war of saying "getting fat."? If fat is ugly and unhealthy, and you are carrying around pounds you should get rid of it at once. At 20 years of age this girl was 196 lbs. Today she has transformed her young body of 20 superfluous pounds.

"About 18 months ago I was considerably overweight, being on the small side and weighing nearly 196 lbs., a 20 pounds of fat. I was also troubled with headaches and pains in the small of the back; heaviness on rising, with a very poor complexion which broke out in spots every so often. Since taking Kruschen Salts all these conditions have disappeared. I have now gone down to normal weight, viz., 146 lbs., have a lovely complexion, and this is the morning with the heaviness whatever."—(Miss) H. P.

The formula of Kruschen, supplying the needful salts of these famous European Spas whose waters have been known from time immemorial for excess fat. These salts ensure a perfectly natural clearance of undigested food substances and all consecutive watery waste matter. When this waste is allowed to accumulate, the body's chemistry is liable to store it up out of the way in the form of fatty tissue. Once Kruschen gets into your blood, disfiguring fat commences to disappear. Every pure atom and calorie you take doubles this commencement. Get a bottle of Kruschen Salts. You won't lose 4 or 5 lbs. a day or anything foolish like that, but almost before you realize it pound by pound disappears until you finally have the fashionable figure you have always desired.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

A new food made of milk not corn meal, developed by Cornell University is said to have varied possibilities.

TARZAN AND THE LOST EMPIRE—No. 84

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs.

When Tarzan refused the crown of Caesar, he lost no time but assembled five thousand warriors and started his march of Castrum Mare. The white plumes of the Waziri nodded at his back as he led his army out of Castra Sangumarius along the hot and dusty Via Mare. The Waziri were chanting their battle songs.

But there was no battle. The effort of Fulvus Fupus to seize the throne proved futile when the people knew that the Emperor's nephew, Claudius Hasta, was in the gates with an army. Shouts of joy resounded through the city. The officer who was about to attack Lupus and von Harben ordered his men back.

Together Pavonia, von Harben, Lupus and Galuba stepped from the deserted building. Approaching them they saw the head of a column of marching men. "Look!" said Pavonia, "their chief is garbed like a barbarian and white-plumed warriors follow him." "The white giant is Tarzan of the Apes!" cried von Harben.

Tarzan greeted the lost explorer affectionately. "Your father will be glad when I bring you back," he said. "You came here in search of MIX TARZAN of the Apes?" demanded von Harben. "I seem to have arrived just in time," said the ape-man. "How can I thank you?" exclaimed von Harben. "Don't thank me," said the ape-man. "Thank little Nkima."

CARRYING PLACE WEEKLY NOTES

CARRYING PLACE — Unusually heavy winds which have swept this community from the 10th to the 12th of the past several months have set the "old-timers" to talking; and the general consensus of opinion is that we are experiencing more gales than ever were known here before. Situated as it is between Weller's Bay and the Bay of Quinte, the community of Carrying Place fits directly in the path of storms coming before before has the wind seemed so determined for every room in this township to move; to watch from their windows the antics of hapless pedestrians as they struggle and grabble at flying hats, or bend themselves double in their efforts to make some headway. But it is another matter entirely when the individual comes to try it for himself. Some interesting accounts of the effects of the "elements" on the "fair sex" are given. One of the most unusual comes from the home of Mrs. Wesley Hay, immediately behind the Mission Carmel neighborhood; and it is presented in a personal report. It seems that a resident of the community, who is an aviation enthusiast, had tethered his plane out on the bay shore, and during the earlier part of last week's blow, he found it necessary to place stones in and around the fuselage to anchor it. These failed to restrain the plane from making occasional sorties into the air, however, and finally, after a particularly heavy gust had carried the plane some distance into the air, it descended with a crash that demolished the machine and also removed the wings.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Le Tour spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Miller in Trenton.

Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Wannamaker, together with Miss Gertrude and Mr. George Kemp, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Rose Carnrite and Miss Edith at Smithfield.

Work on the United Church shed which is being built for the community hall has halted temporarily due to poor weather and working conditions. However the lumber has been secured, and work will be resumed at the earliest possible opportunity. The members of the Women's Association who are financing the building hope also to have the hall ready for use by spring.

There is Safety In Strength

"Canada has no special financial difficulties and is free from internal or external political disturbances. The soundness of the financial structure and the relative absence of political difficulties make the prospects of an economic revival more promising than in most other countries."

This is the considered opinion of The National Industrial Conference Board, Inc., of New York (an organization devoted to the most careful and scientific inquiry) and appeared in a preliminary study of the present depression issued in April 1931.

For more than 65 years The Canadian Bank of Commerce has taken a leading part in Canadian business. It is one of the largest and strongest units in the Canadian financial structure.

Miss Smith, coach of the champion B.C.I. girls' basketball team, received a letter from Miss Hamilton regarding the practice of the practice game with Bloomfield High School, Picton. Miss Smith and Miss Gray, City on March 23rd and April 1st and 3rd. Miss Smith's team has been practising hard for these games and will be glad to meet them as they did last year this year, providing the necessary funds can be raised. The cost of the round trip by motor from transportation to Toronto is $2.50 per person. The Bloomfield players will be entertained by the girls of the province and should be a great success. Miss Hamilton, secretary-treasurer of the provincial play-downs, it is hoped.

On Monday last we spoke of the clubs getting together on a schedule for the O.H.A. intermediate series. In receipt of a letter from Charlie Hibbert, secretary of the North End A. C. encouraging by a change in the 1933 schedule. It was decided at the meeting held in Toronto on Saturday last by the O.H.A. executive that the O.G.S.S.A. title be split.

Thanks to Mose Bigby, the hockey entry in every one of the Senior Basketball League teams has secured a sure-fire defeat at the hands of Bloomfield's crack team "Parkie" last night. For some unaccountable reason Mose thought launching together all night and is passing it night by night and they are going to bring at their best as a matter of fact the "Imperials" were not up to their usual form by a long shot. Whether the green and white had been playing the night before, or were off, we cannot say but it is a certainty that they were not at their best in a much better exhibition before this season. Bloomfield's Jack Begin was the best player on the ice, while Gordon Hollway and Bill Hollway were the defence for the visitors. Again they deserve credit for the locals' threat on the offered.

In the opening game the Frankford "Stiffers" will carried their colors over the Bloomfield Intermediates from Trenton while the O'Malleys, Bill and Charlie were sent to the waiting with the crowd. This last match, hits of the Frankford Dartfords, showed the fans a few sparks and just why he was the champion of the city. Halsey has been handed the "Stiffers" for the Belleville game, when the Trenton "Imperials" will be Ochser[illegible] and Pickett next Monday.

A Widower's Waterloo?

By N. Florence Leech

Peter Harmon sleeder and trim in his dark blue suit, strode slowly down the street from the fruit department of Miller's Dry Goods Store.

"Something for you, madam?," he inquired, with a bow.

A stylish, middle-aged woman turned from inspecting a bolt of brown chiffon velvet, and they laughed.

"Aggie!" he exclaimed in astonishment.

"It it isn't Peley," she cried, and extended both hands "Why, Pete, I haven't seen you for twenty-five years."

His eyes brightened and he straightened his shoulders.

"Aggie, it's good to see you!" he declared heartily.

For half an hour Aggie Bowles lingered and they moved as much as possible time to her as a busy floorwalker dared.

"You must take supper with us tonight," he insisted cordially. "Come about six, I'll be glad you to meet my daughter Dorothy and the three children."

"I'll be there, sir, Peley," she answered, and the warmth in her voice was not lost.

After Aggie had gone and he had found time to telephone, Dot Peter wondered if he had acted wisely. Dot's visit to Miller's Dry Goods Store and a year later had married curly-haired, dimpled Billy Stanley Bowles.

Today her auburn brown eye met his evidently as she told him of her husband's death two years before; of Aggie, who was married to a daughter, Milly, who was married and living in California; of a prosperous tendent managed the farms for her and later for nothing.

Aggie met him at noon, and they went to the cafe for their lunch, accordingly. How youthful, how vibrant she was in her blue coat with its gray fur collar and cuffs, and her lips smiled at him and he squeezed her arm lightly. As they sat and kept glancing at him expectantly, he had a strange feeling that there was waiting....He gulped his glass of ice water, wiped his lips with his napkin in a shaking hand. He loved Aggie, but he had had his chance. She was free to be his now, and she could have her pick of men.

Aggie leaned forward. "Peley" she said "I must go home and write again, are you going to let me go?"

He tried to reply, but his words stuck in his throat. He knew in an instant then she put her hand on his, that she could be his bride, and unreasonably to talk this way over, you Peley! But the girls of that new generation go after what they want and why shouldn't she?

"I love you, Aggie," he murmured, "but—but I've got Dot to think of."

"What has she got to do with it?"

"Everything," he answered unhappily, "everything."

"In that case—" she looked up again and he saw tears brimming her blue eyes. "I'm going home tonight," she stated and rose abruptly.

"But our picnic tomorrow—" he protested.

"I'm going home," she repeated.

He stared at her in dismay, and realized that he could not let her go. He wanted to be with her tomorrow, and always.

"Aggie," he said and his voice shook. "You can't leave tomorrow, for you must buy a wedding dress and a trousseau."

"Peley!" The shining bliss of her eyes washed away the years, leaving him a boy again for a moment.

"I can buy all I need this afternoon," she protested, "and there is only we had the Rosses—"

"Oh, we'll be married tonight," he cried. "Come on, let's hurry. Which shall we buy first—the license or the ring."

ESCAPADE BY SPY CLUE IN GERMAN PUSH

Daring Belgian Officer Flew Over Hun Lines

STORY OF BALLOON

LONDON, March 16.—(CP)—Long hailing of Brussels, who was in the Secret Service in the Great War, took a desperate chance, a story of how the bravery of a Belgian officer resulted in the Allies gaining back the German troops' movements in the German drive on Verdun last year. The balloon was filled, but there was some hitch and it could not rise. By 1.30 in the morning all was ready. He stepped into the balloon and discovered that there was a field a-read. The thing that came has an anonymous message from someone else as a German spy. It left those concerned with rather a feeling of relief, however, in a few days messages from Count Zeppin to General Joffre, and continued to arrive during the rest of the war.

"I had the pleasure of meeting Deschuyk after the war, and he told me the story of his escape. Coming to the leak the balloon did not go quite as high as was intended. Over the trenches he expected to be seen, and one Verey light nearly set fire to the balloon.

This also happened, and he hanged on a beautiful Summer morning, and climbed out of the balloon, and cut it went. He put the overalls he was wearing out of sight, and was left in the uniform of a field g-read. He had landed within half a mile of the place he calculated he would land. A motor-charabanc came along the road, and he hailed the driver if he was going to Luxemburg. He was, and Deschuyk got in.

The people who sympathized with the Allies, through the war, a French officer and because he did not make authentic efforts to get into touch with them. He was entrusted and presented with white feathers.

The very first thing Deschuyk did was to get rid of the white feathers. He was delighted with the decoration he was decorated with the Distinguished Service Order by King Albert himself, and also was made a member of the Legion of Honor."

SENATE TAKES UP CHANGES IN ELECTION LAW

Compulsory Voting One of the Subjects Discussed

RAILWAY BILL

Bill is Attacked From Many Quarters in The House

Ottawa, March 14 (CP)—Drastic changes in Canada's election laws may result from a discussion now afoot in the Senate. Members of the Upper House, appointed for life and free from fear of defeat the next time they do to them at the next election, are taking a leisurely interest in the way their less fortunate fellow-legislators in the House of Commons win their places.

Compulsory voting was one of the proposals discussed yesterday when debate on Senator W. A. Foster's resolution calling for a change in electoral practice was continued. It was severely lavered by Senator A. D. MacRae of Vancouver, who is a Conservative on occasions, a Progressive at the last election has had recent and vivid experience of political politics, and several other speakers.

"The 1930 election campaign cost more than a dollar for every vote registered," said Senator Foster, "the total cost to the country and the candidates being more than a million dollars. It cost him several times as sentional inducement to be defeated and it cost his opponent three to get elected. Candidates were faced with burdensome demands both before and after election. The cost of campaigning is many good men who could be of real service to the country."

The House of Commons is about ready for the Senate on the Bennett bill which has been debated since early last week. Hon. Ian Mackenzie is the first speaker on the bill for the Liberals and is expected to fire the last shot for the Liberals. Leader Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals will close the debate with a reply for the government.

A provincial bill already featured in New Brunswick legislature as a railway bill, Senator Robertson's Transportation Bill was attacked from many quarters. Speaker after speaker protested against the powers given the Board of Trustees which, it was charged, the Canadian National System, claiming branch lines could be scrapped, wages reduced, men thrown out of work and amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific effected—and Parliament could do nothing about it.

Threats Unlistened

Underlying the financial plight of the railways, and the trade policy of the Government, said Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior and champion of low tariffs, the dollars and cents were tied up in railways, steamship lines, canals and harbors but the high tariffs and trade restrictions imposed by the laws, left them idle and unproductive.

"Change your trade policies and you solve the railway problem of this country," exclaimed the former Interior Minister.

Sam Factor, Toronto's only Liberal member, modernized Wilson's 14 points by enumerating 14 objections to the measure. It should not be passed, he said, as it definitely forbids amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In the Senate election dates Senator Foster was following out in all the speeches that have been made since he introduced the bill, since it was introduced a week ago by Senator W. A. Foster, there had been agreement that elections should never be held and that some change should be made, preferably a system of compulsory registration and voting. He believed a committee of the Senate might do some valuable work along this line.

Senator MacRae advocated adoption of the Australia system of compulsory voting. Further he would shorten the notice of an election from six weeks to three and make the Federal voting list and registration available for provincial elections.

Senator Buchanan urged that campaign expenses in each constituency should be borne by the electors of that particular constituency thus bringing to them a realization of the cost of campaigning. The central campaign fund should be utilized for general publicity work and purposes applicable throughout the country, he said.

LEGAL BEER SOON IN U.S.

Bill Will Soon be Passed in United States Congress

New York, March 14—(AP)—As the United States Congress got ready to twist the pigeon and the legal beer spurting the brewing industry allowed himself signs today of arousing from a low lastitude.

Reports from the field revived energy there was a twirling of Bachelors' Thanks," as a Revenue Dispenser Union in New York decided to resume its old title of "Bartenders' Union."

A statement from Jacob Ruppert, New York brewer, said 3.2 per cent beer, the kind, that the pending bill would legalize, would be fully as potent as the average pre-prohibition beer, and made better in quality because of advances in machine-making and chemistry.

An Asbury Park survey of families estimating, that more than 50,000 men would get permanent jobs in breweries alone after legalization of the

A poll of the States showed, that 34 "waiters now stand there are 13 in which the sale of beer is contingent only on legalization by the Federal Government.

In New York, where bills to regulate and tax beer were to be introduced into the legislature today, Mr. Lehman called for quick action, so that beer can go on sale as soon as Washington legalizes it.

In 25 other States, measures to legalize and regulate the sale of the drink were in varying stages of the legislative mill. The remaining 11 States either restained by prohibition laws or defeated beer legislation.

SOVIET DELAY CAUSES CONCERN IN BRITAIN

Ambassador From Moscow is Interviewed on Matter

LONDON, March 16. — (CP)— The grave view the Government takes of the arrest of six British subjects connected with the Metropolitan-Vickers Company in Moscow was presented to J. M. POWERS TO MEET IN ROME

Sunday Conference May Have Far Reaching Effect

Rome, March 16 (AP)—The disarmament Conference, Premier Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, his foreign secretary, Sir John Simon, and Premier Mussolini here Saturday and Sunday, it was said today. The meeting would be held not only with a pass for salvaging the World Disarmament Conference but also in stimulating extreme tension in the world political situation in Europe.

Mr. MacDonald and Sir John plan to leave Geneva tomorrow night for the week end discussions with the Italian leaders, it was learned here. They will confer with Premier Mussolini here Saturday and Sunday.

In reference to disarmament, the official circles said, Mr. MacDonald will talk with Il Duce concerning his new plan of disarmament which he will present at Geneva soon. In addition, it was believed he would discuss the Italian plan for general conclusions to be announced in case the disarmament conference fails to placate public opinion dissatisfied by a lack of concrete resolutions.

Although officials believe, Mr. MacDonald places even more importance on the political side of the visit.

One of the major points is to discuss with Premier Mussolini relations with Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany, and particularly in inducing the Italian Statesman to use his influence to prevent the brown shirt movement giving rise to difficulties and rumpt wars with France such as the incident at Kehl barracks.

NEW LOVE TEAM BOWS TO FAME IN "SIGN OF THE CROSS"

Cecil B. DeMille's magnificent spectacle, "The Sign of the Cross", at the Belle Theatre, now until Friday, continues to enjoy large patronage at all performances, and it is the opinion of audiences that it surpasses anything, surpasses all expectations.

Spectacle on a monumental scale, including a whole panoramic picture of Rome under the reign of Nero; a dramatic story of elemental events crowded into the space of a few days and a series of perfect-ly-cast, human characters, the performance of sheer brilliance! It is no wonder that audiences in Belleville, as well as all over the world are cheering DeMille's achievement.

The spectacular type of film, such as DeMille himself made famous in the silent days, is one of the screen's finest contributions to entertainment. No other medium has the scope and variety of its camera. Now with the addition of sound, the great director is able to surpass all his past efforts.

"The Sign of the Cross" is first and foremost a spectacle of pagan Rome, reaching its fullest expression in the modified arena, the Circus Maximus, where the gladiatorial contests and the games that delighted Nero served as a prelude to the sacrifice of the Christians to the lions. But it is also a dramatic story of a Christian girl and a Roman Patrician, whose roles are played with rare beauty by Elissa Landi and Fredric March.

Frederic March and Elissa Landi, in "The Sign of the Cross" at the Belle Today and Friday.

It is the first time March and Miss Landi have played together, March is a Paramount star and Miss Landi was "borrowed" for this picture. Leo Carrillo, who plays the role of Fox Lax spent her days on the Fox lot.

It is Charles Laughton's Nero, however, which is not only the outstanding characterization of the film, but one of the most memorable characterizations of all time. Here is acting that approaches genius! Laughton Colbert, too; as the Empress Poppoea, gives a performance of remarkable depth and power. A Mickey Mouse, Cartoon, and the Belle News provide the Features of the evening.

Eight Stars in "State Fair"

Eight screen stars, a prize story of fiction, and a champion would are the blue ribbon array of Fox Film's "State Fair," coming to the Belle Saturday and Monday, matinee daily.

Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers, Lew Ayers, Sally Eilers Norman Foster, Louise Dresser, Frank Craven and Victor Jory are the stars of the production, which is directed by Henry King.

The novel "State Fair" is the prize story written by Phil Stong. It won the Literary Guild award for 1932, and is certainly a sensational best-seller.

Reviewers, critics and readers are combining romance, comedy and tragedy in thrilling human drama. It has been one of the most discussed books of the day.

INCENDIARISM SUSPECTED IN $130,000 FIRE AT MOUNT ALLISON UNIVERSITY, N. B.

Athlete Almost Loses Life as College Burns is Overcome by Smoke

Unconfirmed Report Says Bags of Inflammable Material Found in Cellar and Floor of Centennial Hall at Mount Allison

SECOND FIRE IN CITY IN SHORT TIME

Insurance on Destroyed Property Amounts to $85,000, Loss is Estimated at $47,000 Above Total of Insurance Carried SACKVILLE, N.B., March 17 (CP)—With two of the Mount Allison University buildings lying in ashes today, talk of incendiarism was general on the campus.

What appeared to be separate fires, breaking out after 5 a.m. today, destroyed the historic building of physics and engineering and Centennial Hall, a stone structure 300 feet distant. The total loss was estimated at $130,000. Insurance on the lost property amounted to $85,000.

Indicating the fires were the work of an incendiarist, one unconfirmed report said that bags of inflammable material were found in the cellar and top floor of Centennial Hall. Only ten days ago Mount Allison Academy went up in flames, resulting in a loss of $75,000, and academy students were being accommodated in the University buildings.

R. C. McLellan, Saint John, fire marshal for New Brunswick, will leave for Sackville tomorrow morning to investigate the fires.

"Spar" Tables Overcome

The latest outbreak nearly cost one Mr. Spar his life, and if not Glasgow, N.S., Mount Allison hockey star, was overcome by smoke in attempting to save furnishings from Centennial Hall. Other students who stumbled over him carried him to safety.

The "red science" building, originally erected in 1869 but since entirely reconstructed, was filled with all its equipment, including the physics laboratory. In this instance the building loss was $45,000 and the equipment loss $40,000.

When Centennial Hall stood, only the charred walls remained standing by the time the fire had run its course. The hall was erected in 1895.

The alarm was given when a son of Professor N. Tucker, whose residence was the nearest, saw the reflection of flames from the science building.

STOCK SALE EVILS CALLED WIDESPREAD

W. A. Gray Urges Careful Legislation on Sale of Stocks

"EVILS" CITED

Long List of "Wrongs" Aired in Statement Published

Washington, Mar. 17 (CP)—"Careful consideration" of corrective legislation in connection with the sale of securities is urged by William A. Gray, former counsel for the United States Senate's Banking Committee, in a report on the situation made public today.

He stated Gray was evidence of widespread "evils" in the sale of stocks. The evidence in the Senate's inquiry, Gray's statement said, "would leave no doubt "that powerful groups have grown on a large scale in a particular stock exchange, manipulate the market and control the price of that stock in normal times so as to accomplish almost any desired result."

No Recommendations

In the remarks public by Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher, made no specific recommendations for legislation, but said "the report is an indubitably worthy of the most careful consideration."

Gray said the evidence showed:

Existence of pools for the Manipulation of the market;

Employment of trades to "stabilize" prices;

The use of the knowledge of a specialist in all other stocks, and his customers;

Activities of brokers themselves in the formation of pools and in trading on their own accounts;

Heaping up of large stocks by officers of corporations who were in the position to influence the affairs of the corporations and whose transactions in their own securities were "calculated to create a measure of confidence in the public from knowing of their dealings."

Operations of specialists on their own account.

Solicitation of newspapermen and financial writers because it was to the immediate information of the business men and traders with regard to the market conditions, and to aid the market manipulations, with their services paid for in substantial manner;

Tapping of prices in order to sell issues to be sold to the public at a fixed price;

Manipulation of the affairs of trading corporations of directors was for the benefit of those who held the said the matter of their affairs with the public, and the distribution of the investing public.

BEER CONTENT IS AT STAKE

Wine Producers Seek Separate Bill on "Light Wines"

Washington, March. 17—(AP)—Democratic leaders of the United States House of Representatives decided today to send the beer legislation to conference with the Senate in an effort to iron out differences between the two branches on the alcoholic content, the House Bill having allowed 3.2 percent by weight and the Senate Bill limiting it to 3.05.

The matter will have to be put up to the House, which apparently is ready to accept the Senate version.

Wine producers, it is reported, under hearings now in progress in Washington stricken out and a separate bill framed to legalize "light wines" having the 3.05 percent restriction.

Public opposition to getting agreement between the Senate and House was expected by Senator Byrnes (D., S.C.) when he closed the bill through the Senate.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

On the eighth day of March it was, some people say
That St. Patrick at midnight he first saw the day;
While others declare 'twas the ninth he was born,
And 'twas with a mistake they first hailed the morn;
For mistakes will occur in the hurry and shock,
And some blockhead has always blundered the clock—
Till with all their cross-questions, sure no one could know
If the child was too fast, or the clock was too slow.

Now the first faction fight in Child Ireland, they say
Was all on account of St. Patrick's birthday.
Some fought for the eighth, for the ninth more would die,
And 'twas wonderful, too, how they blackened his eye.
At last both the factions so positive grew,
That each kept a birthday, or two then, or two;
Till Father Mahaliow, who showed them their sins,
Said: "No one could have two birthdays but Jethis".

Says he: "Boys, don't be fighting for an eight or a nine;
Don't be always dividing, but sometimes combine;
Combine right with the nine, and seventeen is the mark,
So let that be his birthday"—Amen", says the clerk.
"If he wasn't a Jwin, sure the history will show
That at least he is worth any two saints we know!"

Federal Legislature is Provided Under New Constitution

FEDERAL COUNCIL

Government Plan is Published at London

London, March 17 (AP)—A federation of the British provinces and native states of India is proposed in the government's plan for a new Indian constitution, published this afternoon in a "White Paper."

It provides for a federal legislature of elected representatives of British India, and representatives of the Indian states appointed by the state rulers.

There would be a Federal Executive consisting of the Governor-General and not to exceed 10 members of Council of Ministers which would be responsible to the legislature subject to certain safeguards.

Upper Chamber of State

The Upper Chamber of this legislature called the Council of State, would consist of a maximum of 260 members, 100 from the native States and 156 from British India, both of whom are elected by members of the several provincial legislatures. The Governor-General of India would be empowered to make laws, more difficult, thus adding to the Chamber the same power as the House of Commons" type.

The Lower Chamber, or House of Assembly, would consist of a maximum of 375 members, of which 250 are to be appointed by the State rulers, and the remaining 300 representatives of British India allocated to the provinces and the several communities and interests in each province.

Governor General's Duties

Activities of certain departments of the Federal government would be entrusted to the Governor-General personally. These include defense, foreign affairs, and ecclesiastical administration.

He would also have these responsibility to the British government for the tranquility of India. He also would have special responsibilities for the protection of any group minority in peace in India or any part of India, responsibilities of safeguarding the financial position and credit of the Federation and of safeguarding the legitimate interests of minorities.

REASON WHY FLAG IS NOT FLOWN

In some zone by it was the practice for the flag to be flown from the staff on the city hall on St. Patrick's Day. The occasion, it was explained by the mayor of the city of Bath, was not limited to St. Patrick's Day, and it was the practice to display the flag on every holiday, or any occasion that the mayor deemed the desire of every prominent citizen, whether it happened in Belleville or Los Angeles, and every time the citizen the caretaker felt like climbing the flagpole, he would do so. The practice of flying the flag became an insurance than it was declared a nuisance. Later the city council took the matter up and decided that only on important occasions was the flag to be flown. That is the reason, it was explained, why the flag is not being flown today.—March, 17th.

Lots will also be allotted free of charge, it is expected to those who apply to the city council for them.

MISTAKE IN NAME IN 40 YEAR STORY

Interesting Old Piece of News Recalled by Reader

Forty years ago on March 15th, 1893, there appeared an item in the Intelligencer referring to the election of Mayor Ketcheson, called court judge of Iowa in a spirited letter to the editor of this state. The name was given as James M. Gibeson, Co. Monaghan, Ireland. In the "Forty Years Ago" column of the Ontario Intelligencer this item was repeated as a bit of interesting old time history and then, through a mistake, was brought to light —the name of the successful candidate for the judgeship was not James M. Gibeson but Thomas M. Gibson, native of Leeds County, Ireland. Seeing the item in this week's issue, Mrs. John Mackenzie called the attention of the editor to the name which was given wrongly four decades ago.

SHAMROCK WORN

Program of Irish Music Given at Bridge Street United Church

St. Patrick's Day!

In Old Ireland this day there is the life of real Irish tunes sung in reverence to the patron saint of the Irish. It is on this day that the occasion of the birthday of one of the greatest saints, according to any Irishman, is celebrated.

Throughout the Green Island there will simple services in the church and chapels throughout the land. And there will be no doubt a sprig of shamrock in lapels—while the fragrance of incense will rise from the air like the vaporous wisps of the peat fires, from chimneys of the cot stone fireplaces.

In New York and Boston and other large centres of the world, wherever Irishmen live, various celebrations will be displayed. Parades in many cities will feature the day.

In Belleville there is little except the glimpses of shamrocks in flower pots to remind the Irishman of the old country he may have left not long ago, a few children, however, held special services in memory of the Irish saint.

At Saint Michael's Church, High Mass was celebrated at eight o'clock. Students at the Academy enjoyed a holiday.

Bridge Street Choir Program

With the same organist, Bridge Street United Church choir on Thursday evening, caught the very spirit and were the Irish with which to please a large audience at Bridge Street United Church in an Evening With Old Ireland" to mark the annual Shamrock Day meeting.

Dr. W. F. Hunt, leader, brought a busy of Irish song before the audience which recreated the life of this country which was played so notable a part in the history of civilization, in social progress. In all lands, in all centuries and in all other phases of achievement. Bridge Street choir is one of the finest musical organizations in the province and with it Mr. Hunt has an apt vehicle for the translation of the riches of music.

Thursday evening's program was one of the finest and most delightful of this organization in its long history. For softness, shading, balance, and epitome of interpretation, the renditions were of the highest class in the musical world. This was but of course were of the peculiarly Irish quality which gives it a well trained and talented body of singers. Every voice in the choir had full advantage of this was seized by the choir. There was not a solo numbers very appealing, there were no solo fine readings and there was a brilliant performance of the "Overture to Zampa" on the piano by four members of the choir. This number for precision of time and for balance and intellectual as well as emotional satisfaction was one of the highlights of the program. Selections of the choir had a fitting climax in the work of the evening in two spiritual.

The performance was one which will long linger in the memory of those who were privileged to hear.

PHEASANTS, PARTRIDGE COME THROUGH FINE

Lack of Heavy Snow Enables Them to Forage

Although a few short months ago the birds throughout the Belleville and maple leaves in numbers and gorgeous colorings, during the past few weeks most of the birds have been scattered covers of the west hand Belleville and throughout the entire district, especially in the adjoining townships of Sidney, where they have been so plentiful. Here and there along the country roads are flocks of the long-tailed birds, shooting thru' the small thickets and underbrush on the farms. They have been reported seen along the Trent Road by Frankford, and for the past few months had commented on their increasing numbers, and the reason has been given for their disappearance. Pheasants are a game bird, and are reported to be numerous in all townships in the district. Lack of heavy snow and sufficient food throughout winter has enabled them to come through the season well fed and plump.

HOSPITABLE TREATMENT ACCORDED DELEGATES

Ex-Mayor George A. Reid, present Hydro Commissioner, in the city, also spoke of the treatment accorded visiting Hydro officials from Belleville who convened in Perth this week.

The banquet held on the night of that city, all the council, store keepers, hotel men and even the citizens, it was stated, were present and commented on very favourably by all from this district who attended the convention, declared ex-Mayor Reid many months.

So impressed were the delegates and friends of the order, who met to initially establish the population of the town, during the convention, with the intention of having another that strong pressure was brought to bear to had the annual meeting at the same place next year.

In conversation with the Mayor and the Chairman of the Board of Trade of Perth, it was learned by Mr. Reid, that the number of visitors was listed on the relief lists of the town, but, it was also explained, were not on full relief but were only being assisted on part time.

THE ROBIN'S HE

Spring's herald is here. The robin! The cheerful note from the bird whose joyous call is the best indicator of Spring. Many people shouts know, has been heard.

One was seen yesterday on the west side and this morning the cheric of the robin was heard on Burton Street, and a glance showed the bird in the top of a maple tree.

Higher deels necessarily originalic in exceptional individuals, and though their teaching may not touch the general mass of mankind, a new standard leaven is formed, and this persists.

FARMERS ASK REDUCED TAX

J. V. Hanley Chosen President of Township Association

A meeting to form a taxpayer's association within the Township was held in the Municipal Hall in the Township of Tyendinaga on the 4th concession, Monday night.

Delegates from every part of the Township attending, after discussion, adopted a constitution, and elected county councillors, were given by resolution power to act for the district, were two co-workers also whose term has not expired as county council in past years, and who were classified with municipal affairs. With the extreme low prices for farm products which now prevails and with the farmers' income even on the best farms so reduced that it presents serious problems of adjustments, the farmers in this district feel that a meeting should be arranged to at least help, of the present high taxes. It will be impossible to a great number of them to pay the taxes for the current year. In respect to Township expenditures this has already been done, some items being reduced more than 40 per cent. Considerable road work has also been made in rural school sections. County expenditures up until the present time have been decreasing and the county levy exceeds all other taxes considerably. Each year on their tax bills by three mills. It is with the object of obtaining relief from the large county expenditures that the meeting was called by members of the County Council the necessity of drastic reductions in all county expenditures, that the ratepayers in several municipalities organize. J. V. Hanley of Read, was the unanimous choice of the meeting as president of the newly formed organization and William Mollechan, Shannonville, P.O., was appointed secretary.

NO RECESS IN U.S. NEW DEAL

Washington, March 16—(AP)—President Roosevelt was ready for the United States Congress today for two more emergency measures in his "new deal" programme—farm relief measures and unified, controlling to give assent to a recess, the President hastily whipped into shape these additional measures.

The farm bill is in the nature of an "economy" measure, and the position, inclining authorization for the government to buy surplus farm lands and withdraw them from the market to prevent ruinous slumps in would be covered.

The second of the new planting season impelled Mr Roosevelt to this experimental expedient.

Broad powers to spend, mind per unemployment relief but even before the bill was introduced it became the President intends to get started some measure of spending relief.

His programme calls for authorization of corporations, formed in preparations for reforestation in federal forests; he believes at least 200,000 men now idle could be put to particularly in the east, can be shifted to the areas for this vital work.

Banquet Closes Seventh Annual Seed Fair Held in This City

Dr. E. S. Archibald of Ottawa is Chief Speaker

A dinner was held Thursday evening, at the New Queen's Hotel in connection with the 7th annual Prince Edward District Seed Fair, and was presided over by C. H. Elliott of Picton, president of the Quinte District Seed Grower's Association. Some 45 persons were in attendance and in the competitions for the various prize winners in the judging of exhibits, those who had received awards in their respective sections during the afternoon. Mr. Elliott, as host to the dinner, on behalf of the association, made capably carried through his office in the chair.

Welcomed by Mayor

Mayor Tice conveyed the welcome of the city to those assembled, the speaker of the evening particularly and to all who had come from Belleville to make the 7th Annual Quinte District Seed Fair a success. Belleville's welcome in Belleville "now and any time," said the Mayor.

Called on, Mr. J. W. MacKay, of the Seed Branch at Ottawa, made some most appropriate remarks, relative to the present fair and, the value of those fairs to the farmers in the community they serve. Warden Ross, of Prince Edward-Addington also spoke briefly regarding the fair, and the value it was to the district in progress here, to the district.

W. J. Webster, Agricultural Representative for Prince Edward County, also paid tribute to the fair, the leader farmers, who had taken standing in the afternoon's competitions, stated that it was the first time that the Dominion Department of Agriculture had been represented at the Quinte District Seed Fair, and that it was also the first time that the Dominion Seed Branch had been represented.

Advantages of World's Fair

In much detail, Dr. Archibald described the exhibit which he had accomplished at the World's Grain Exhibition at Regina, and the conference there or world's experts in connection with grain growing, world's grain marketing, merchandising methods, transportation and storage and all matters relating to Canada's greatest agriculture, as a product. He outlined how the conference was to be split into technical groups to study how experts from various countries in each group dealt with their own problems and matters pertaining to their own country.

At the conclusion of Dr. Archibald's address a vote of appreciation to be sent the other speakers was moved by David A. Thrasher and seconded by Ernest Bonter and carried.

"Finally the chain stores came to us and told us their connection was being business away from us, and in the seven cent milk. They warned us that if we did not reduce to eight milk at a lower rate, they would be forced to put the milk business themselves," said Mr. Hogg. "I made inquiries of some friends in the business across the line and they advised us to meet the chains and get into conflict with the chain stores. Some of them were installing their own milk supply. We then agreed to furnish them milk to sell at eight cents and to keep up the tonnage on our wagons we had to reduce our rate to the consumers to nine cents."

GOLD RETURN IS FORESEEN

France Has Lost Much Gold to England This Year

Paris, March 16 (AP)—Great Britain's eventual return to the gold standard has been suggested in financial circles as a contributing factor to the decrease of Bank of France gold, which has declined 5,000,000 francs since to England.

The Bank of France gained gold in the week ending March 9 for the first time in many weeks, the total being 288,000,000 francs (approximately $11,530,000) in the week of March 10, three times the gain.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

The mention of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, stirs the heart of the Irishman wherever he is found, whether at home in Erin or anywhere else on the face of the earth, for wherever man is, to that he the Irish have come to stay.

Ireland is particularly blessed in its patron, a man of great zeal for the missionary cause of humanity as well as for the education of his people. He was a lover of human kind and his works endure to this day, his marks being left on the British Isles and the continent of Europe. To him the church throughout the world owes a debt that can only be repaid by furthering the cause for which he stood.

St. Patrick has a peculiarly typical of the Irish people in the richness of his emotional nature, his religious passion, and his love of country, although it is generally believed that he was a native of England. His early contact with the Irish people as a slave boy doubtless enriched a nature just waiting for that touch and spirits which are marks of the Celt. It was well for St. Patrick that he went his early years in Ireland and for Ireland that St. Patrick came to that country for he made that land the greatest educational and religious centre of the world.

Today it is fifteen hundred years ago since St. Patrick began to be an influence in that land, but like the emerald of the isle, his memory remains green. Study of his life and works and his influence upon civilization is being more and more free of fable and much of legend, there are also facts which have are as true as anything in history and as well substantiated.

CIVIC SENATE

A local senate of ex-mayors, ex-aldermen, ex-trustees, and former Hydro Commissioners is proposed by the Chatham News as likely to be of a great benefit to the community.

Other papers, as the Mail and Empire, express the regret that such men as have rendered such service immediately they are out of office, are out of the way of serving their community, whereas their knowledge ought to be invaluable to the municipality.

But, of course, this body of local senators would only wield the power of words and influence. Neither could they transact business nor veto the acts of a council, board of education, or Hydro Commission.

Would there be risk of feelings arising between the elected bodies and the senatorial ranks? While such feeling might be possible it would not be probable for the ex-servants' association would realize that they should not be giving gratuitous advice on everything under the sun, thereby embarrassing the executive body with a plentitude of ideas, few of which could be carried out. Rather would the senatorial body exercise that experience which they have had in office. This should be worth much.

PITFALLS OF MODERN ART

Many people are puzzled over modern painting.

It seems so lop-sided and bizarre, so lacking in drawing, so unreal in color.

They do not get at the painter's motive in departing from the good old-fashioned way of representation, painting a scene or an object as it meets the eye.

The old method was all right before the days of photographs and news-reels for "the public then was unacquainted with what was going on beyond its local horizon."

Now that things are changed since the war, points out Homer Saint-Gaudens, Director of Fine Arts at Carnegie Institute, "the restless emotionalism of the artist all unconsciously seeks new fields of endeavour. The very intellectual and imaginative interest of our highly-tuned, nervously-educated social order presents the answer."

In the Carnegie Magazine (Pittsburg) is printed some advice given to a company of artists, but illuminative of those endeavouring to understand what seem the vagaries of modern art. The artist, Mr. Saint-Gaudens says, turned to stress in painting what he "thought of the objects before him".

"Of course, hitherto 'thought' on the part of an artist was the last thing expected in the literal interpretation of the word. The artist's thought might be serious or placid. It might be loud-mouthed or gracious, genuine or fictitious, or merely inconsequential. It might be hysterical, or joccse, or satirical.

"But, at any cost, the artist was asked to emphasize these reflections rather than his technical ability to reproduce an object, or his proficiency in handling, let us say, the effect of light."

One hardly realizes that Sinclair Lewis' new realistic novel is fiction at all until just near the end, when a Tammany politician goes to gaol.

UNTARNISHED CHILD

Oh; let who will forget the past.
And live for-days ahead;
For me, I love the bygone times
And dreams that now are dead!

In them I find a happiness
No other days can hold,
And still in memory I possess
Bright hours' untarnished gold.

Oh, let who will go strongly on
To grasp the future's prize;
My joy is in a distant dawn
When dreams were in your eyes!

And who can say that we who know
Our moon of bliss has waned
Have less of wealth than those who go
In search of joys ungained?

Oh, let who will seek all things new,
For I cannot devise
One hope that could be fair as you
When dreams dwell in your eyes!

TORONTO GLOBE having reached the venerable and honorable age of ninety years has been sitting back and accepting bouquets from the rest of the craft not quite so covered with years and righteousness. Brockville Recorder, however, while giving the Globe credit for ninety milestones, points to its own proud record, boy and man, weekly and daily of over one hundred years. Kingston Whig-Standard also has some claims around the century mark, while Belleville up in the front row in everything, can point with pride to the combined age of the Ontario Intelligencer as approaching two centuries—so friend Globe should wait until it has something really worth bothering about before disturbing the class with a mere ninety-year service record.

AFTER THE BANKING HOLIDAY in the United States the money came flowing back in deposits in greater volume than could be easily handled. Folks who yielded to panic and withdrew their deposits before the bank holiday was declared were only too glad to get their money back in a safe place, many of them not having slept an easy wink since substituting the sock for the bank. Some folks were robbed of their money between the banks and their homes and certainly regretted their mistake. Millions of dollars form a steady stream of deposits flowing back to the banks all week, accompanied by many "Thank God, that's over."

UNITED STATES IS BEER-MINDED. Seems as if nothing matters much over there now except beer, and more beer, and all branches of the law machinery are being pushed to make it legal to manufacture and sell 3.2 beer, which will approximate in strength the old mild lager so popular in the old days. It is estimated that present brewing facilities are capable of producing 25,000,000 barrels of beer a year which, it is thought, will satisfy the demand, although 65,000,000 barrels were consumed in 1916. The lager taste has been supplanted by a taste for strong liquors and it will take time to bring back the vogue of the light wines and beers of pre-prohibition days, if ever.

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

March 17th, 1913

The terrific electric storm which put the city clock out of business and did considerable damage in the city hall tower, wrought damage in other parts of the city and evenly alarmed many persons. When the fire bell struck the dynamo of the Intelligencer typesetting machines it sounded like a sledge hammer on an iron rail; in several homes pictures hanging on the walls were clattering at by the concussion of the thunder clap which immediately followed the severe bolt. Mr. Leon E. Walmsley was at the telephone when the electric flashes started and he was sent backward with such force as to render him partially unconscious; the skylights on the roof of the Sinclair store were shattered; windows in the Belleville business College were broken; a chimney on the residence of Mr. J. R. Walmsley was damaged; telephones and electrical motors were rendered useless for the time; the lightning did some slight damage at the police station by breaking a tap and basin on the bath tub; Mr. Sidney Marshall or McLaughlin's garage was thrown to the central floor with such force as to render him partially unconscious. When the bolt struck the tower of the city hall, the electric fluid followed the gas pipe from the clock to the basement, melting off a portion of the lead gas pipe causing the escaping gas to ignite. Jean Harris, the janitor, who was in the basement at the time seized an old garment and smothered the flame. It truly was a wild storm—fortunately no one was seriously injured.

There will be at least one Shamrock well-wetted to-day. Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock the Third was launched this afternoon.

Regarding the proposed Collegiate Institute it is evident that members of the Board of Education have been thinking along similar lines. Mr. Wm. Johnson informs us that it was his intention at the January meeting of the Board to move a resolution on the same lines as that introduced by Col. Ponton. In fact he had the motion in his pocket, but being in the chair he was unable to introduce it. The educational institutions of our city are its greatest asset. If they can be increased it would surely be a good investment. The matter might well be looked into by our citizens.

HOW TO MAKE DIET BUDGETS MEET EASILY

Calorific Values of Foods Should be Known to Mothers

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

In this day and age when the dietary budget may be limited, the problem of the housewife is not only one of keeping down expenses, but foods which in variety and chemical content will meet the requirements of maintaining health. In the adults, as well as supplying sufficient nourishment for the growing children.

A mother, therefore, should acquaint herself with the calorie value of various foods. This information may be obtained from various dietary books, or by addressing a letter to the U. S. T. ELLICOTT FOUND GUILTY

Magistrate Thinks Executive Clemency Might be Exercised

Thomas Ellicott, Cannifton, was found guilty of a charge of manslaughter, Magistrate Kilner (ex-officio) when the judgment in his case was handed down in the Police Court at Magistrate Mills and Kilner, who sat as a jury, could not agree. This was the most police court on Monday morning, when sentence will be passed on the accused. His Worship was of the opinion, that more than the usual amount of clemency should be shown in this case, which was quite justified by the evidence given by K.O.A. The full text of the judgment follows:—

"In this case the charge against the accused is based upon the driving of cider made on the same date, the 22nd of October, 1932, in the township of Thurlow, County of Hastings, from the apples

The person who committed the cider have sworn that it made their cider from the apples which they had taken from six barrels in the cellar of the accused over the period of 10 days before it became intoxicating, nor did the circumstances render which, if cider is kept, it becomes intoxicating. It is well known that cider is sold in bottles long after it has been manufactured, and it is apparently it is possible to have cider kept for a considerable length of time without becoming intoxicating.

"The question after which the accused is prosecuted does not make the offence complete, but the principal knowledge as to whether the business is of a permanent nature, or that it is apparently the duty of the person making it. Now, it seems almost beyond the hand that the liquor is not intoxicating, or at all events to convince me that it was not intoxicating that fact. If the accused sells a liquor known to be intoxicating, knowingly, sin which is generally known to be intoxicating at the time it is made, the mere fact that the sale is made to a friend would not be sufficient, because the accused knows, that such a friend is likely selling it to others. He sells cider; perhaps his position is different, but some of the cider, that is, cider who made is not intoxicating, but nevertheless if he sells it to others or course, the cider that is made intoxicating based upon date and under some circumstances between the manufacture and delivery the court that he has taken some reasonable precautions to ascertain before allowing that the cider is not intoxicating. No evidence was submitted to me that the accused took any reasonable precautions to determine that the cider sold was not intoxicating.

Had Large Quantity

"In this case the accused had an exceptionally large quantity of cider on hand which suggests the presumption that he intended to sell it, and he admitted that he made a business of selling cider in the county selling cider. If he made a business of selling cider it is very difficult to think of cider he was clearly violating the provisions of the Liquor Control Act. He apparently held that the cider in four barrels in the cellar was not intoxicating vinegar. This, if true, would be a violation of the Liquor Act, but I would have no right to manufacture vinegar without the consent of the Liquor Act. The other two barrels in the cellar were tapped and he was from the evidence that he supplied the cider for the sales in question. He was not a licensed dealer, and says he was contented 4.99 and 5 per cent. alcohol, and was not intoxicating.

"The constable found in possession of the accused man two barrels of cider which were on tap, in stock, tapped and ready for sale.

"I have no difficulty in finding that the cider found in the cellar by the witness Carman Clapp and that the cider sold to the witness Armstrong, and it did make Carman Clapp and others intoxicated.

"There may be some ground for supposing that the accused may not know the cider in the two barrels in his cellar was intoxicating, that it had actually arrived from the process of fermentation in the condition of intoxicating liquor. The fact, however that the 5th, 6th and 7th witnesses on hand prevents me from drawing the conclusion that there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused knew that the cider had reached the stage of an intoxicating liquor. The fact that the accused made use of the cider as vinegar does not appear to excuse the accused for this offence because of the sense of knowledge that dealing with a commodity which he knows to be intoxicating, namely, intoxicating liquor and the responsibility when selling what upon him to ascertain whether it had reached the stage of intoxication before he had such knowledge is necessary. The Act, however, is of such a nature that a broad enough to constitute the offence whether the accused knew that it was intoxicating or not.

"This is the first case that has come before me in which cider has been alleged as the intoxicating liquor.

"I find the accused guilty but I think circumstances of this case might be considered."

Hamilton Controller is Outspoken Over Relief

Hamilton, March 17 (CP)—Controller Morgan Thursday told members of the Board of Control the municipality of fair Fleet is deliberately trying to starve out the needy of the city.

Controller Instance once several cases. One family had been given $3 in relief in one week. A check-up revealed that the cider in four barrels in the cellar was being used as vinegar. This, if true, would be a violation of the Liquor Act, but it would have no right to manufacture vinegar without the consent of the Liquor Act. The other two barrels in the cellar were tapped and he was from the evidence that he supplied the cider for the sales in question. He was not a licensed dealer, and says he was contented 4.99 and 5 per cent. alcohol, and was not intoxicating.

"The constable found in possession of the accused man two barrels of cider which were on tap, in stock, tapped and ready for sale.

"I have no difficulty in finding that the cider found in the cellar by the witness Carman Clapp and that the cider sold to the witness Armstrong, and it did make Carman Clapp and others intoxicated.

There may be some ground for supposing that the accused may not know the cider in the two barrels in his cellar was intoxicating, that it had actually arrived from the process of fermentation in the condition of intoxicating liquor. The fact, however that the 5th, 6th and 7th witnesses on hand prevents me from drawing the conclusion that there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused knew that the cider had reached the stage of an intoxicating liquor. The fact that the accused made use of the cider as vinegar does not appear to excuse the accused for this offence because of the sense of knowledge that dealing with a commodity which he knows to be intoxicating, namely, intoxicating liquor and the responsibility when selling what upon him to ascertain whether it had reached the stage of intoxication before he had such knowledge is necessary. The Act, however, is of such a nature that a broad enough to constitute the offence whether the accused knew that it was intoxicating or not.

"This is the first case that has come before me in which cider has been alleged as the intoxicating liquor.

"I find the accused guilty but I think circumstances of this case might be considered."

Fined $100 and costs.

MOTION OF H. C. NIXON DEFEATED

Attorney General Flays Former Drury Government

DEBATE OVER

TORONTO, March 17.—(CP)—Backed by the Liberal vote, the Ontario Legislature today after yesterday sustaining one of its busiest days of the session. Among the bills passed was one piloted by Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney General, on the former Drury Government and Mr. C. H. Cahan, K.C., Conservative Leader; the defeat of Mr. Nixon's motion to censure the Government; the defeat of Hon. Peter Heenan's, K.C., Liberal amendment to the throne speech censuring the Government's education grants; and the sitting of three Conservative members during which doesn't happen often.

Mr. Price winding up the debate and clearing the decks for the budget speech to be tabled Tuesday, defended the government, denied there was discrimination by Conservative ranks, and declared Ontario was not bankrupt. He also spoke as or any country which sought to overthrow the present government of the country.

"Trade follows the flag" he said "and we are glad to have thousands of gaze as they have had all over the world, attempting to overthrow us."

Mr. Price claimed the Government stood by its records, that "it was not out of the air" by Governmental expenditures, and declared the completion of "fifteen" flights carried on some parts of the province by those, who opposed the Government, and that the 16th flight "will be the first shot at the big thing—and when did he do? Gimme a dime for a cup o' Java, mister? And this ain't no brother-can-you-spare-a-dime racket, I'll let you know, you was a regular guy the last time I seen you.

Do I know th' Kid? Don't make me laugh, mister. I managed that baby-faced boob when he was sellin' pumpkins for three bucks a round at th' county fairs. Do I know him? Listen, mister, believe it or not I'm the only guy that ever hit th' Kid first shot at the big thing—an' when did he do? I'm askin' yuh, cully, what did he do?

I'll tell yuh! He muffed it—that's what he did! Muffed it. Yeah, that's why. He can't take it, see? An' that's the reason I'm out here bummin' coffee money right now, see?

The prologue to "The 13th Guest" was unusually long, and when the thirteen revelries had gathered to hear the reading of a will by Manuel Morgan, on the date proper of the mystery play, Marie Mercer, Capitol Theatre's charming hostess, was there, as a tiny girl, had sat down at the table and began to read the will. After the reading the thirteen revelries left.

Marie is surprised to discover that her new apartment, her furniture and the cobwebs and remains of a sumptuous meal were there. Then the doorbell rings and the thirteen revelries again sit at the table as before.

"Okay by me," he says. "I guess you ain't in no fighter comic that's how it's the rest of 'em."

"There's one thing I gotta know, though, Kid," I tells him. "How good can you take it? There ain't no future for a fighter that can't be a guy who can't take it, see?"

"Aw, I can take it," he tells me.

"That's tough," I tells him.

"It's worse than that," Joey comes back. "That bum of his'n of us they've been a bet made here an' there on him. He's got th' champ in' about four rounds, see?"

"Sure, he can take it, Joey," I says.

"Yeah, yeah," Joey says real confidential. "Can he take it? Say, that's a funny thing about that fight, see? Yuh know, it's got tah go four rounds, can take it for four rounds they might get a grand in it for you an' me, Jerry."

"I get yuh Joey," I tells him. "Sure, I get yuh. I'll see what I can do."

Well, buddy, th' night of th' fight I'm in Bessett an' I'm talks to him like a Dutch Uncle, see? I tells him that this kid, yuh understand?

Don't worry, Kid. "Kid, this is our first chance at th' big dough, an' All yuh got tah do is tah get in there an' take it for four rounds, see? Yuh can do it, Kid. I'm with yuh all th' way. I'll be right there with yuh. I'll be right there with yuh. Yeah, I sure thought I was.

OUR LETTERS

As a rule we are judged by our appearance, and as a rule, too, it is the first impression that counts. So it is with our letters. Your letter, like your visiting-card, stands for you. Therefore you should devote care to seeing that every detail of the letter form is correct, and the letter as a whole worded as gracefully and graciously as you can, word it.

On the envelope and on the heading there should be as few abbreviations as possible. "Mr." and "Mrs." of course are abbreviated, but do not abbreviate Street or Avenue, or the name of the city or the State. The marks of punctuation at the ends of the lines of the address, on the envelope or in the heading.

Space your pages carefully, so that the margin on all four sides makes a frame for your hand writing.

Once Overs

Isn't it a relief to abandon that system of bluffing which you have indulged for so many years?

It is no longer necessary to make people believe your income is larger than it really is.

It wasn't necessary before, but you got pleasure out of pretending more than you had and were.

It worried you more or less to keep up the bluffs.

But now, what is the use of bluffing?

You thought once that it brought social prestige to seem to have large income.

It took constant scheming and unnecessary expense to look prosperous.

Since there has been a general reduction in expenditures for social position and self-gratification in exploring amusements out of your class, you have come to see how ridiculous you were to think you knew better.

Some of those who made the most lavish display are the hardest hit right now.

With head and bluff dropped out of life there is more real comfort in being just what you are, isn't there?

Beauty .... By Helen Jameson

Shapely Head is a Quality of Beauty

In the pigtail period, when hair was valued by length and abundance more than quality and arrangement, head shaping was a beauty problem. The woman with the flat dome gave herself an uplift by building a tower of braids or curls. The girl with the high brow, thin face put on spread by wadding buns over her ears. The long-faced woman was advised to wear her hair "low", which meant that extensive tresses were done into figure eights along the nape of the neck. Fat was dieted and spread out. Age, and supplemented by bands upholstery that came from a factory.

The culture of the present moment, composed of locks that have been thinned and carefully gardened, offers a chance of creating a nice head silhouette, but it takes a seeing eye to spot the possibilities. The average woman thinks she is doing well by herself if she presents to the public eye a smooth, beautifully waved, neatly braided head. There's no more than that to the hairdressing problem. Let the beauty girls gratify themselves before a triple mirror, get a bird's eye view of her profile. Let her press her locks in snugly along the nape line, see the head contour from there on the crown. If the back of the head is flat, it is unfeminine and unpretty. That black hair should be waved, the nape in-curve is inconsistent. Near hair, between crown and neckline should be fairly abundant to produce a more rounded silhouette.

For the thin-faced girl to skin her hair straight at the nape sides is to give the features a sharpness of outline that isn't gracious. Side curtains should be soft, allowed to fluff somewhat away from the head-base; if the ears are covered the hirsute frame will be more flattering. Avoid the gaping side draperies for the wan-faced baby; they accentuate hollow cheeks. Her coiffure should be a silky screen.

This style holds good for the girl with a broad and tall expanse of forehead. Through forehands have been played up these last few seasons, there's many a wearable brow that is improved by the decorative element supplied by a few casing headpieces. Or a glistery fringe with ends slightly curled. Bald foreheads add to that sculptured effect that is all the beauty woe. But aren't we a bit tired of them all?

The arrangement of the hair makes or unmakes a feminine facial chart.

The coiffure should suit not only the face, but the figure. The hairdress for a large-boned lady who carries excess weight requires a certain dignity. Yet, when the big, full-blowing bob was in swing, some of these heavyweights committed the terrible style error of took on an air of the ridiculous when topped with a doll bedding the misguided one's birthdays.

The woman with a heavy jaw line is improved by a smart, neat hairdress in which hirsute frills do not appear. The best bet is the straight back manner, hair swirled at the back, arranged to cover cropped locks at the nape of the neck.

Coiffure styles are so varied, there's so much latitude that for every woman there is a design that is flattering and chic.

How to Efface The Spare Chin

"Poor Emily," commiserated Emily's most hateful friend, "all her cream puffs and macaroons went to her face. That's how she got heavy jowls and the double chin. A warning to younger ones who are taking on weight. Only they'll never know the agony of jowls and chins of the coming years. They'll see the writing on the wall. They'll go right on wolfing down the pastries, especially now that figures are getting buxom and curves are so fat."

Will they? No. Emily's round years were a part of the period of rotund figure. To indulge in pastries at dinner, luncheon or tea, you had to eat. Passing plates and platters was the national pastime. The guest was urged to partake, and partake she did, though the corset stirrings were scarcely able to endure the strain. That's when a lot of double chins got their start.

If caught young, that bit of flabbiness under the middle of the jaw bone can be annihilated. You do it by adonning with a heavy cream, kicking up the flesh in tiny folds, rolling between the thumbs. Next morning you remove in place a compress of gauze that has been dipped in an ice cold astringent. The cold pack is warmed by the flesh, gets steaming hot. This change from skin chill to skin fever has a restorative effect.

No woman need be told that curbing the head tilted forward is a habit that is death on chins and pretty necks. Mimejes are here, haven't anything to do but rest and relax. So they ditch the job.

In chin treatment we suggest the abolition of the high pillow. One way of strengthening neck muscles is to sleep on the back, head tilted backward, a small rolled pillow placed at the back of the neck. This position is also recommended when there is a roll of fat on the upper story of the head.

Let us urge early treatment since wrecky chins and crinkled necks are no minor beauty ills. They are dreadful; women hate them, as they rightly should.

REDNERSVILLE W.I.

A well attended meeting was held at the library room, which looked exceptionally bright and cheery for the occasion. The President, Mrs. M. Wooss presided and after community singing led by Mrs. Mullen, the minutes were read by the secretary Mrs. S. Babbit. Letters were read expressing thanks for flowers and a letter from the secretary of the Ontario Trustees and Sanspryvery Association was read and discussed. This expresses the deep appreciation of the Association for the co-operation of the Ontario Women's Institutes and suggests that each branch send a delegate to the annual meeting to be held in Toronto. A motion was carried unanimously that Mrs Ralph Stafford be the local delegate.

Mrs. Fred Brugh then displayed a beautiful quilt in two shades of rose on which tickets are to be sold to raise funds for the library. A splendid paper on "Co-operation between Home and School" was then given by Mrs. Ralph Stafford, and a discussion followed, several expressing the idea that more mothers should visit the schools. The meeting was brought forth many lovely Valentine thoughts.

At the close afternoon tea was served by the library committee with Mrs. Mabel Pulver, convener. Tall yellow candles and ferns decorated the table. Mrs. Alex Anderson and Mrs. Pulver poured tea and several of the Rednersville ladies assisted in service. It was carried that the collection go to the library and a hearty vote of thanks was extended to those assisting.

CANADA FINDS LARGE WHEAT MARKET IN U.K.

66 Million Bushel Sent Across in Seven Months

FIFTY-NINE P. C.

Stock of Grains Lower in Britain Than Last Year

Ottawa, Mar. 17 (CP) — Canada continues to find a large market for wheat in the United Kingdom, according to the monthly review of the wheat situation issued today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. During the seven months from August to February the United Kingdom imported 112,000,000 bushels of wheat. Of this amount, Canada supplied almost 66,000,000 bushels, or per cent.

These figures indicate that during the present crop year British mills have been using an extremely high percentage of Canadian wheat. Canada ranked next to Canada as a source of supply for the United Kingdom, imports from Australia amounting to 19,000,000 bushels.

February Importations.

During February the United Kingdom imported 16,219,227 bushels of wheat of which amount Canada provided 7,505,327 bushels. Imports from Canada, during the month, 7,000,000 bushels higher than during the same month in 1932.

While total imports of wheat into the United Kingdom during the past seven months have been considerably lower than during the same months in the previous crop year, total stocks of imported wheat in the United Kingdom are lower than at any time during the same months since about 18,000,000 bushels lower than under years ago. In view of the small reserves being carried in the United Kingdom at the present time, a steady demand may be expected for the balance of the crop year.

WHEAT PRICES SUFFER BREAK

Half Way Through Session Prices Were Two Cents Lower

Winnipeg, Mar. 17 (CP)—Weighed down with heavy selling, commission or miscellaneous selling, wheat futures broke sharply on the Winnipeg grain market today. Later, however, a recovery was made at the low points, prices closing the day somewhat above the season's lowest two cents lower. Trading at the opening, lended to slacken.

Nearing the mid-session period, prices were 1¾ to 7¼ cents lower, May at 53⅞, July at 53¾ and October at 56⅝.

Chicago traders reversed their position of Saturday, unloading their holdings at the opening. Cautious traders combined with hedging sales by elevator interests to send prices lower. At one period values were 2¼ cents under the previous close.

Support was almost entirely lacking today. The lower bottom at which widely-spaced bids were shelved from all sides. Values shrieked early and showed a tendency to recover.

Liverpool prices, failing to respond to the advance here yesterday, opened unchanged to lower and Buenos Aires, however, registered fractional advances.

PRICES SLIDE BACK POINTS

Speculative Enthusiasm Appears to Have Cooled

By Canada Wide Correspondent, Associated Press

New York, March 17—Speculative enthusiasm appeared to have cooled in the stock market today, as well as in some of the commodities, although considerable bullishness was still manifest in grains.

Stocks early today lost one to three points in many instances in the early dealings, but after midday, much of the loss was regained, under leadership of the rails. Sugar stocks again turned strong. Securities generally showed little disposition to give up any important portion of their spectacular gains of Wednesday.

Santa Fe converted an early loss into a gain of 1 1-2 points, and Union Pacific virtually recovered a recession of 3 1-2. Two point drop in the shares of Radio Corporation a net gain of one. Losses of two to near-by fractions, included American Telephone, Allied Chemicals, American Tobacco B, and Case were more than half regained.

PRICES HELD THROUGH LIST

Base Metal Shares Recover From Early Leak-

NOSE

Toronto, Mar. 17 (CP)—Base Metal shares today recovered partly from the setback suffered in the previous exchange but the general list held steady, the opening prices which were slightly down from yesterday's close. After falling back to 10% International Nickel moved forward again under active buying and at mid-afternoon was at 10⅞. Beaulieu advanced to 72¾ for a net gain of 1¾.

Other inter-listed shares lagged and Brazilian selling at 2 was down ½ for the day, while C.P.R. fell three ¼ and Ford held a small gain.

In the oil group, Imperial recovered an early loss to trade this afternoon unchanged at 8¼ but International Petroleum was unchanged at 11⅛, off ⅜ for the day. Utilities were irregular, Ottawa Light, Heat and Power slipping to 89. Banks were inactive and implements were down slightly. Massey Harris to 3¼ and Cockshutt Plow to 5.

Volume Picks up And Rising Tendency Seen in all Stocks

Toronto, Mar. 17 (CP)—The mining market lagged through the early part of the day but was inclined to improve in the afternoon. Nickel, after touching 10 1-2 at 10:35, retired to sell at mid-afternoon at 10.60, supported by a strong undertone.

Fair buying developed in the big gold shares after noon and Lake Shore pushed up to 72.50, McIntyre 45 to 22.75, Dome 20 to 15.50, Pioneer 20 to 3.20, York Knight 5 to 4.15 and Wright Hargreave 2 to 4.25. Normoda edged up 30 points to 23.45.

Knocks and Boosts

With the sun shining on both sides of the fence the local baseball fangs went into a huddle last night. As we said previously this is the season when the fans and fanning antics would be forth-coming when the executive of the Nationals got busy. Well it did and President Dr. Jack Marshall reappointed Jack Ellis manager, Bob club and Mr. Chas. Meagher secretary of the league. Mr. Meagher has done considerable work in the cause of baseball in Belleville in the past years unknown to the fans and patrons in general. "Charlie" will undoubtedly make a real live-wire proxy and he was assured the unanimous support of the club's executive.

Once President Meagher and the club's executive get down to the nitty gritty of the possibilities of baseball in Belleville, we predict a success. The executive at once went to work and a number were present at the meeting, that the annual Belleville baseball "powwow" dance would be held the latter part of April. We understand that the club has been guaranteed fully fifteen hundred worth of valuable prizes. Some real entertainment will be provided, dictated and with a ten piece orchestra in attendance, a real success in this district's annual dance should be the outcome and success it has enjoyed in past years.

No less a personage than Art Scarlett, of Toronto Globe was also about at third base and left field for the last week and mentioned in all the recent meeting held by the club. He is quite anxious to play ball again this season. In passing we might suggest that the Nationals should be able to boast of the "Scarlet trio of outfielders, collectively, now at present. Art Scarlett, Alex Watt, Harry Morgan and Art Neal. Quite a trio for any baseball club in the O.B.S.L. ever could place them on the field. Speaking of the outer garden then these three fans pulled on all "to get 'em". Incidentally we have heard that season tickets will again be issued by the Nationals' owners and at a much lower price than last year.

Congratulations are in order for Sir Sherit's Belleville K.I.Y. juveniles on their recent victory in the Eastern Ontario Juvenile Hockey League for the second time in succession. Their next game will be against Cornwall on the 23rd inst. Let's see a good sized crowd give the Belleville juvenile team a rousing send-off. Cornwall is the league champions this season.

It was somewhat with surprise that we read the following sport editorial in the Kingston Whig-Standard:

"Twice lately we've heard the rumor that Belleville would be in the Senior A hockey next winter. And we've even heard it discussed locally that the Peter' team might possibly be taken over by Senior B company along with maybe Oshawa, Cobourg and a Toronto outfit. This may be just a pipe dream but there is some substance in the cards. If we organized hockey, and struggling along about three weak spots on the team, could we not get enough endurance somewhere through the summer, and especially—had an old-fashioned early winter next year, in order to really be accomplishing successfully. It's not very likely but there'd be days we had a great Senior A team only eight miles away."

For the general information of our readers the contemporary we might inform the club that Belleville is not interested in any manner regarding senior hockey and in the possibilities of a group as wide spread as the one mentioned above. As a matter of fact a grouping of a much larger and more surprising nature may be afforded the Belleville hockey team next season.

BELLEVILLE TO MADOC.

No. 305 8.00 A.M.—Local Passenger Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday. Leave Madoc 12.00 Noon same days.

Last night's 10 to 1 win by the Oshawa Collegiate seniors over the Marmora H.S. speakers at Lindsay Arena was merely the old regulation of a well coached team defeating a team made up with a few inferior club of boys, who were willing but just did not have the "stuff" within.

Much credit than appears in the surface can be given the Marmora kids as they have not been afforded the opportunity to practice during all season, like the majority of the other City rivals have. The speedy and clever stick handling of Gratland, Goodall and Mumford was something worthy of note. Incidentally in yesterday's board many words of comment regarding the play of the famous "Jo Jo" seemed the order. It seems to us that Joe Gratland is a clever, play-maker, but goes just as much for safety as a goal producer. Gratland handled the puck well last night, that all resulted in goals and gave fully a dozen other passes equally as good. On the other hand "Gratty" Mumford, whose bullet-like shot was not in evidence last night, in the past years, proved to be the fastest forward in Eastern Ontario when he flashed the red light seven times behind Cudney.

In speaking of Cudney we might mention, that it is highly improved and has proven to be a better goalie or so much rubber in his blotter. He is a credit to Coach Ellis and can be congratulated on his work. Manager Ellis of the Oshawa lads is also congratulated on their consistent showing in the face of defeat.

Well tonight's games in the Belleville and Quinte League look like "pipe". Especially if the two Ellis' teams try to "try it on" when Gerald Bowen and Yeo Bros. are their usual positions on the Trenton defence.

GRILLS GARAGE BEAT NAPANEE

Exhibition Game is Won by Local Team by 3-2 Count

Grills' Garage, Belleville's local entry in Belleville Industrial hockey league, played an exhibition game against Napanee All Star aggregation last night at the Napanee rink. Fraser tied it up before the first period was over. In the third period Tim Dey scored on a pass from Hennigan, and then put on the pressure to no avail as Napanee failed to score. Summed up nobly on defence assisted by G. Hennigan, Dey stopped what looked like many sure goals.

Napanee—Goal, Hunter; defence Murphy, Fred Bensley; Centre Wilson; Wings, Wilson and T. Polster; Subs — Bentley, Stinson, Fraser, Hennigan.

Leafs Lose Game and Services of "Ace" Bailey, Heavily Hit Sustaining Broken Collar Bone

Red Wings Hold Top Position in Section by One Point

AMERKS TIE

Canadiens Defeat Rangers And Pull Away From Amerks

Toronto, March 17 (CP)—Detroit had Wings hold a six-point lead today in the National Hockey League's three-team section, after clashing duels for group leadership as Boston went tied and Rangers and Montreal Canadiens Maroons doubled strengthened their grip on the Canadian division. Detroit's mark, with the Maroon's cut Toronto's lead to three points and dropped from the Leafs Senators to overtakes.

The Red Wings won a wild and woolly game from Toronto 7-6, as John Ross Roach turned in a brilliant game to earn his third shutout of the season. Gloom in the Toronto camp was deepened when Ivan "Ace" Bailey, star right winger, was wheeled from the ice early in the game and had his collar-bone broken.

Bailey, right-hand man of Coach Dick Irvin when the team is shorthanded, will probably miss the play-off games. The injury came after a turbulent session in the third period in which several fist fights took place and eight players, including Lorne Chabot, Leaf goalkeeper, were penalized.

Game Scores Winner

Hap Emms scored the game winning goal midway through the first period on Eddie Goodfellow's pass while King Clancy was with the penalty-box. Roach turned back every shot the Leafs made in the first period and in the second, even though they turned loose a speedy offensive until the hectic climax. Clancy and the Leafs when Chabot was serving his misery by holding down the puck while Charlie Conacher played goal.

Rangers went down before Canadiens at Montreal 3-1 in the season's most invasion game of the season. Joliat and Sylvio Mantha teamed for the Flying Frenchmen in the tricky left winger singing the shot in the first period. Art Somers tied it up in the second on Murray Murdoch's assist and Wilfred Hergesheimer on a characteristic goal-getting solo to win the game in the final 20 minutes.

Amerks Tie

Americans and Boston put on a spotty display at New York, where the defenses were impregnable, save for the attacking forces except for the lucky goals. Tiny Thompson, veteran Alec Smith gave Boston a lead they failed to hold for more than three minutes as Cooney Weiland paid scored on a neat play with Nornie Bloom. The Amerks needed to break the 1-1 deadlock.

Art Somers and Bill Boston from behind in the highest scoring game of the season at Montreal, as they beat 4-2 spliering the third period but Dave Trottier and Wally Kilrea, an Ottawa City product, scored the goals that sent the game into overtime. Trottier came through with another in the overtime to give the Maroons a 5-4 victory.

The Rooks brothers—Earl and Doug—combined for Ottawa's first goal and after Glen Brydson had scored on, Oy Wentworth's pass Syd Howe added the winner to give Boston its first period lead. Cooney Weiland added the final tally in the second period, the first on a solo play and the second from Bloom and Frank Finnigan, after Jimmy Ward had been a checking factor from Lionel Conacher and Baldy Northcott for a Maroon marker.

NORTHCOTT IN SECOND PLACE

Hooley Smith Betters His Place by One Position

(By the Canadian Press)

Baldy Northcott took sole possession of second place in the big seven today as an easier was added to his record as a result of last night's games, while Harvey Jackson and Paul Haynes were held positionless. Northcott has 31 goals and 19 assists for a point total of 40, seven behind Bill Cook, safely ensconced in first place.

Jackson and Haynes are one point behind Northcott with 29 each and Hooley Smith between them with 30 with two assists last night and is now tied with Aurel Joliat with 31 points. Marty Barry, clever Boston Cubbie, broke down seventh place with 27 points.

BEN JEBY IS 8-5 FAVORITE

Defends World's Middleweight Title Against Vince Dundee

New York, March 17 (AP)—Ben Jeby, Fort Jeby, East Side boy puncher, defends his share of the world's middleweight championship against Vince Dundee of Newport, tonight in a 15 round bout in Madison Square Garden tonight.

A leading contender for several years, Dundee has been under price on decisions, in 1930 and 1931, but the York youngster has shown such improvement in the last year that he has been made a well defined betting favorite.

Jeby won New York State recognition at 160 pounds champion he was awarded a technical knockout over Frankie Schoell in Winning in the 12th round of a 15 round match early in January. Marcel Thil of France is generally recognized elsewhere as champion.

Ben Van Klaveren, speedy Dutch Vollerwight, face Baby Joe Gans of Edmonia, in the eight round semi-final.

BUFFALO TAKES LONDON IN PLAYOFF TILT 2-0

LONDON, Ont., March 17.—(CP)—Point sniping by Lloyd Cross, foremost marksman in International Hockey League ranks, has sent Buffalo Bisons away to a flying start in the final drive to retain the title.

Edged out of first place in the regular schedule by London Tecumsehs, Bisons obtained revenge in some degree, when they blanked Tees, 3-0, in overtime in their first game of the Memorial Cup series on the championship at London last night.

The Victory gave Frank Nighbor's charges three points, the same number as Syracuse, who defeated Windsor Wednesday in the opening game of the playoffs.

Cross, who experienced great difficulty in shooting past Goalie Herbie Smart, the League's shutout King, during the latter stages of the campaign, apparently has found the range for he beat the London custodian for both goals.

MADOC MAKES FIRST TRIP

Hook up With Picton in First Game of District Loop

Two more games are scheduled in the Belleville and District League tonight (Friday) when last year's "3" champions Madoc visit Picton. Madoc, a new entry in the league, the Madoc intermediates in the first game with the Colonny "All-stars" beginning at 8 o'clock. Trenton "Imperials" in the night-cap affair. Harold "Bouncer" Rickwy has been appointed referee for both games.

Granting under an 8 to 2 defeat at the hands of the Griffs' Garage team on Monday night, the Prince Edward County Hockey Association management of "Jake" Tanower have bolstered their roster with the acquisition of three players, while the line-up of the Madoc team has been strengthened by two.

In the second game, when Max Gerald's "All-stars" battle George Laitrash's "Imperials" from Trenton schedule is assured all as the "All-stars" will be practically counted out of the picture if they come out on the short end of the score. On the other hand the "Imperials" must defeat Madoc and also against the local entry in the series' box and are picked by many to finish well up in the race. With two sets of hard hitting defencemen, a clever trio of three clubs boast of, some real heavy body-checking and heavy going will naturally follow.

The probable line-ups for the game: Madoc—Goal, Coleman; defence, Jim Ethier and Wheeler; centre, Campbell; wings, Gerald and Hey, subs, Henderson, Baker, Freeman and Gibson.

Oshawa C.I. Wins C.O.S.S.A. Title Defeating Marmora 10-1

Maundrell For Winners Bags Seven of Ten Markers

ENTER PLAYDOWNS

OSHAWA BOY

Presenting a system of combination which proved most annoying while on the attack and skating at a speed, that was most dazzling the Oshawa C. I. seniors defeated the Marmora H.S. entrant in a sudden death game for the championship of the Lake Shore section of the O.S.S.H.A. at the Belleville Arena by the score of 10 to 1 last night at no time did the struggle, which incidentally was a one-sided affair become spectacular, were the North Hastings lads in the picture although they battled back until the final gong, with a spirit, that was appreciated by all.

Led by "Jo -" Grabosk, who engineered the plays from centre ice, the Motor City crew trod roughshod over the Ralph Neil managed crew. "Jo -Chick" Maundrell was even right winger of the winners, went the scoring honors of the night, when Maundrel banged seven of the ten goals registered by the Oshawa C. I. squad. They will now win the Oshawa "3 meet the Cornwall C.I., winners of the Ottawa Valley and St. Lawrence group, in the first game of the provincial play-downs in Toronto this afternoon.

Best All Round

From the goal mouth to the last alternate the winners had it on the losers like the "-overtal tent and added insult to injury by running amuck and scoring five goals in the middle frame after they had bagged three fast counters in the initial frame. They ended the agony by letting their time and counting but twice in the last period. Peterson and Slater alternated in the nets—as net and had little to do except in the middle frame, when the Marmora lads made their final attempt to pull up even.

Jackson, Kearey and Gulliman proved a stonewall defence while the front line of Grabosk flanked by Maundrel and Gamble showed altogether too much class and speed for their rivals. The former two mentioned combined nicely but were not called upon to extend themselves throughout. Shelenkoff and Pearse looked the best of the subs used by Marmora.

For the losing team Callery in the nets was called upon to carry the brunt of the work and he literally rose to heights to keep the score down. Smith and Paquette worked hard on the defence but could not seem to stop the ever oncoming speedy Oshawa forwards. O'Neil and Stewart were by far the most shining lights on the forward line with Shannon being the best defensive. All three of these lads were threats each and every time they started in the general direction of the Oshawa net. Incidentally Stewart's back hand shot after cleared the net, by him, was the only counter registered by Marmora when some 400 fans witnessed the pastime.

How Scored

Oshawa—Goal, Peterson and Slater; defence Jackson and Kearey; centre, Grabosk; wings Gamble and Maundrel; subs, Chapelle, Guillman, Shelenkoff and Pearse.

Marmora H. S.—Goal, Callery and Irene Smith and Paquette; centre, Simmons; wings O'Neil and Stewart; subs, Hewitt, Lovelace, Shannon and Orey.

Referee—Bill Green, Belleville.

NEWMARKET JR. CHAMPS

Defeat Stratford 3-1 After Four Games Before Huge Crowd

Toronto, March 17—Newmarket had joined the royal family of junior hockey today with the Ontario hockey association title already in the bag.

The Redmen from North York completed a two-game total-and-one series here last night by winning 3 to 1 from Stratford Midgets as a record-breaking crowd of 13,000 looked on. Each team had won a game and they played one tie before the deciding contest Right in the middle of an amateur puck season that had Toronto fandom thoroughly aroused, Newmarket qualified to play Sudbury Wolves, refending Canadian champions, in the northern Memorial Cup round. This series starts Saturday afternoon.

Newmarket fighted harder than the crown-up Midgets, the Redmen much faster skaters and in the effect last night after Midgets had taken a lead in the first period. Faster and better play by the Redmen forwards created the scoring chances in the second, batted out a lead and increased it to two goals in the third as Stratford's scoring stems faded.

Quick following up by Herbie Jones resulted in Stratford's lone tally after eight minutes of play. The Midget left winger barged through the opposing rear guard to slap the rebound of his own shot into the Redmen's net.

Then came the tying goal in the second period, a counter, which raised a protest from Stratford players, who claimed it had not crossed the redline. Howard Peterson was credited with the marker, which came from a scramble in front of the net. This was the third goal of the series and the losers protested, and each time the decision was against them.

Pep Kelly and Glen Vail clinched matters for Bill Hancock's pupils, when the former scored neatly in the first few minutes of the final frame on a pass from Vail.

Tests at a Massachusetts agricultural college indicate that dried dates, raisins, and figs may be pasteurized to free them from insects and disease germs.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

"Oh, no!" Over his dinner's face hovered an expression that chilled his listener. I hoped to be an Arab priest; I tried to become one, but my mother, who knew nothing except it it was a God. A God who thought in round numbers and lived by the clock. At things not approved by the gods and there is only one I have discovered them to be—the gulf between the races which are not doing so well. Some day it will be crossed and reach out our hands to each other, but when? Not in my last two or we twinkle in it.

"Your people have all this Chinese cookie and those pagodas, superstitions. There is nothing in common for you to work together and I know you better than I know my own brother.

"I believe in nothing," he went on, resuming his meal. "I once had religion but it was destroyed. I believed in love and found it false. I believed in all such pleasant nothings, and found them false. I was young and great and happy and was enough for the whole world. Then I found that I was not a benevolent man; he robbed all the estimable Christian virtues and yet he is respected by you white people."

"That is so, I loved him."

Again they bowed.

"I speak of Hamilton Tee as though he were dead. Yet he is not dead, many. The greatest loss of your life is not the thing you have loved long and too keenly. I'm not of your race, but I know how you feel with me, Lee Ting has made me proud to be his. When I was a boy here in San Francisco I experienced nothing except kindness and courtesy and fair dealing. I was attracted to

Political And Economical Problems to be Discussed

A SAFE WORLD

MacDonald Would Make World Safe For Future

Ostia, Italy, March 18 — Peace must be organized quickly if it is organized at all, said Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain here today while en route to Rome for conferences with Premier Mussolini.

He made the statement shortly after he alighted from a plane piloted by Gen. Italo Balbo, Italian Air Minister, which had brought him and his party from Genoa. They went to the latter place by train from Geneva.

Mr. MacDonald was welcomed here by the Italian Premier.

Mr. MacDonald said:

"It is to exchange views with Italy's leaders on broad political problems concerned with the organization of peace that I am here, and I have come with much confidence as to the effect of my visit.

No Time to Waste

"I am impressed with the difficulties confronting us but believe that while they are serious, especially among the great nations of the world, they are not beyond out of our difficulty, both political and economic, and that I make the world a safe and pleasant place for this and future generations.

"We have no time to waste, however.

He continued, "My visit to Geneva and my contacts there with representatives of countries in all parts of the world have impressed me more than ever with the gravity of the problems which confront us.

"Sir John Simon and I welcome this opportunity for a preliminary exchange of views regarding these problems with Signor Mussolini. His invitation came at a happy moment, and we were delighted to accept."

Il Duce, dressed in a frock coat, held out both hands to Mr. MacDonald and said in English, "I am glad to welcome you."

Mr. MacDonald said he had had a good flight from Cuneo, Mr. MacDonald was driven directly to the British Embassy in Rome.

Premier Mussolini received his own car and drove to his office, where he prepared for a meeting with Mr. MacDonald later in the afternoon.

Confidence in Leaders is Voiced by Conservatives

Belleville Organization Re-elects F. M. McKeown President

TWO GATHERINGS

Some seventy-five Conservatives of the city met Friday night in the Conservative club rooms, Front St., for the annual meeting of the Conservative Association of this city and the election of officers for 1933. Mr. Frank M. McKeown made president of the association for the third consecutive year; Mr. Alf. Ellis was re-elected vice-president, and Mr. R. H. Ketchenson again his secretary-treasurer. Ward officers men elected were as follows: Foster, Arthur Bullen; Bleecker, A. F. Aiken; Ketcheson, Chas. A. Payne, K.C.; Baldwin, Dr. J. W. Elvidge; Bleecker, Dr. Colonna; Victoria, C. N. Bird; Murney, P. O. Diamond.

Frank M. McKeown occupied the chair for the evening in a most acceptable manner and in his brief introductory remarks, the secretary, R. H. Ketcheson, read the minutes of the previous meeting and an interesting letter as well presented his annual report; both were approved and adopted.

Mr. W. E. Tummon, M.P. for South Hastings, had invited two of his colleagues in the House to come to Belleville to address the annual meeting of the Belleville Conservative and they were present, namely, Mr. E. P. Willis, M.P. for Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, Mr. Willis' comment, thoroughly stirred the feelings of their hearers and their remarks were followed with a fine degree of attention and interest by all.

Mr. Willis Introduced

Mr. W. E. Tummon, M.P., in introducing Mr. Willis, said that in his congratulatory remarks regarding the work of the Belleville Conservative Association he would not be called out they were there to hear others speak during the evening, and him. He said, however, the people of Belleville had ever given him their loyalist support and he had ever the interest of his constituents here foremost in his thoughts. In inviting his two colleagues to Belleville he had chosen two men of outstanding ability in the House of Parliament who were able to give their messages as well as for their sound judgment. He had up by Conservative governments pleasure in introducing as well as Belleville friends E. P. Willis, representative of the riding of Stouris, Man.

Mr. Stouris Speaks

Mr. Stouris had not spoken many sentences before he had captivated the sincere attention of his hearers. "Men in public life control all business and can make or break or wreck the business of a country," he said. The government has power to do good or great harm. It was very much up to the electors to exercise their choice at the coming confronting the government of their country in these sad times and judiciously select their representatives in the national affairs. Everything depended upon good by knowing" was an old saying and just as applicable today as it ever was. About one-half of the people have a knowledge of this nation's affairs. The United States and Great Britain States it is due to fear. Fear itself. The country is in the hands of men more prone to undue optimism and undue fear. The citizens of this country have been prosperous in the economic structure because they had faith in their fellow men and worked with due thought.

The question of the Canadian government ranked highest in the world and that confidence had been built up by the Conservative government. Whenever this Canada of ours had been in difficulties they had turned to a Conservative government and under the administration of those governments stability and confidence had always been established. And that it is in these days of world-wide depression. Under the leadership of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett we are weathering the storm as no other nation. Our banks, M.P. for Stormont, thoroughly stirred the feelings of their hearers and their remarks were followed with a fine degree of attention and interest by all.

Effort to "Say it with Flowers" Doug Receives No Response from Joan

Hollywood, Cal. Mar. 18 (AP)— The effort of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. to "say it with flowers" brought no encouraging response today from his estranged wife, Joan Crawford.

The actress announced last night, slightly twenty four hours after Fairbanks had been made defendant in a love theft suit, that she had separated from her actor husband. Miss Crawford, however, denied young Fairbanks' legal troubles had entered into the separation, and said divorce proceedings were not contemplated.

"It is merely a case of two people being unable to get along together," she said. "I will decidedly not be dragged those damage suits have nothing to do with it."

Fairbanks, joining his wife in denying that there was any romance and he was setting out immediately to woo Miss Crawford the same as he did before she became his bride in 1929. He said he already had sent her flowers.

"And I am going to send her telegrams and I bet my every dollar I send her telegrams when I can't get her on the telephone," he said. "This is not like other separations for me as in all in love."

IMPROVEMENTS ARE NOT PENALIZED HERE

City Assessor's Assurance Repairs Have Never Been Penalized

Property owners of this city will not be penalized by assessment increments on their properties following any minor repairs to buildings, alterations, or the addition of modern conveniences through painting or remodelling, ordinary repairs to buildings are elaborate enough to warrant the 5% increase in assessment, Mr. F. Bell Ketcheson, city Tax Assessor, Saturday morning.

Mr. Ketcheson says that house holders who paint and beautify their homes will have no assessment increased, prompted this statement to allay fears.

"We have never assessed any property through that method," declared Mr. Ketcheson.

"Where modelling, assessed low because of poor repair, is completely renovated and put back into its former condition, then the assessment is judged according to the amount of work that is put on it. In the case of additional verandas, extensions and so on, this is taken into consideration, but they have to be actually large ones before the owner is assessed," he added.

A very pleasant part of the evening was the recital of organ music by Mr. Ernest Wheatley, organist of the church, who played while visitors were waiting for places at the table. His well chosen program was heard with keen appreciation, the delight of hearing Mr. Wheatley play being always a special attraction at social gatherings of this nature at St. Andrew's.

THIRTY MORE DEAF TAUGHT

Largest Attendance in Not Due to Increase of Deafness

While the attendance at the Ontario School For the Deaf has increased by thirty this year bringing the total to 326 students this does not mean that deafness is increasing in the province, superintendent H. E. Petterly stated today in answer to an inquiry from the Ontario Citizen. The increase is due to the fact that many deaf who would normally remain at home are now coming to the school are now attending the institution.

The "Canadian", the official publication of the school this week runs an article, "Teachers and Parents" and refers to an announcement in the United States of a movement particularly to an exchange to this effect."

"The plan is to make expenditure the medical protection to succeed in checking deafness and in reducing the number of deaf children under education to our special schools, therefore," the article continues, "Every child born in this school. But we doubt the feasibility of this plan. The increase, in most cases, is due to two factors, one is that the schools are being extended to include high school and special vocational courses, which necessitates a longer school term, thus increasing the yearly average attendance, while the total number of pupils may be no greater, may be even less."

"Another cause of increased attendance, which does not imply any increase in the number of deaf children, is that greater efforts are being made to locate the deaf and secure attendance at school, of every deaf child in the province or else in Ontario is educated. Number of deaf children have been found who are past, many of them, the compulsory school age, and most of them are adults. On the other hand there is good reason to believe there are several more deaf children that we hope to get. This results in a considerable increased attendance, but does not imply an increase in the number of deaf children in the province."

MILLION IN SCHOOL PLANT

Col. Poston Points to Value of City Schools

"I wonder" mused Col. W. N. Poston, K.C., during the reading of the School Estimates at the meeting of the Board Friday evening, "I wonder if the taxpayers of the city realize what a whale of a lot of much property and equipment this Board has control of."

"What is the total valuation of the five school buildings and equipment in this city?" he asked.

Secretary F. W. Finlay: "It is about $800,000 by insurance purposes."

"That is a tremendous sum—one that the average tax payer goes not often think of," observed the Dean of Trustees of the Board.

Col. Poston was in attendance at the meeting against the advice of his physician.

L. C. A. PENALTIES ARE INCREASED

One to Three Month Term Provided in Seizure Cases

Toronto March 19—Tightening up of the Canada Temperance Act was indicated in the Legislature yesterday when Attorney-General Price introduced an amendment to the Liquor Control Act providing that in cases where conviction has been cancelled "shall hold, possess the main application for another permit while the cancellation remains in force."

The present act allows a person to apply to the board for a new permit after one year, or, in cases contradicted in section 87, which sets out that no person should apply for another permit within a period of 12 months after the cancellation. This conflict is removed by the amendment, which makes the latter section void.

Increased penalties in certain cases are provided by the amendment. In an explanatory note to the amendment the increased penalties come into force where the value of seized liquor exceeds the value of $100. In order that it may not be necessary to set out the value of liquor in the conviction, the value of such liquor, or the fact that it was purchased in accordance with the provisions of the act, the amendment removes any doubt that the conviction bad could not be put into effect unless the value of the liquor was actually set out in the information. The penalty in the amendment is not less than one month's imprisonment or more than three months, unless the convicted person establishes to the satisfaction of the court that he was ignorant under which the liquor was obtained, and the place from which it was obtained.

Section 102 is amended to make it permissible for a court to impose a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $500, and in default of payment, a sentence of three months' imprisonment.

CONFIDENCE IN LEADERS

commercial life of European countries and of the American Republic has been.

Promises Stability.

At the head of the Government in Canada today is a man of outstanding capabilities, a man who during his years of public service has proved himself a true statesman, a man who is working for the good of Canada and each of its individual citizens, a man with the best background of education of any; a most successful lawyer and a man with a knowledge of business, a builder in many lines of commercial enterprise, a man with one of the keenest brains in any country and one of extreme satisfactory temperament. Such was selected to his high office in the administration of his country at one of the darkest hours of stress. "Remember his value and our business concern placed on him", said the speaker.

Mr. King was a prudent, wise, would have invested in Canada today had he held the office now occupied by Hon. R. B. Bennett, whose background of education or experience for the high office he now confirms facing this nation now? The United States with a population of 120,000,000 was in debt to the extent of $20,000,000,000 while Canada with its 10,000,000 was, under the leadership of Mr. Bennett and the Conservative administration, maintaining its credit and commercial life.

Western Situation.

Mr. Wilkinson went on pointing out the situation in the west where the Dominion government has been extensively and necessarily had, to aid the people during the past few years when wheat prices had so declined, Europe and the United States countries closed to our trade. Had Mr. King's policies been now carried out our Canada would have been swamped by imports of cheap labor without outlet for our own products.

Empire Trading.

The trade agreements with empire countries entered into last summer at the Empire Economic Conference was the greatest accomplishment in British unity in a century, Mr. Wilkinson declared, the driving force of that conference Canada, the great source of supply in matters for her surplus. The concepts of that conference were always satisfactory to Canada, which would increase as years went on. The increased trade in Great Britain were vast in some lines, small in others but all increasing, Many values were not the same as a few years ago and our export trade had increased accordingly. To a thinking man on the value of our dollar and pound sterling for many years. Gradually as had been anticipated, the United States in agreements at that conference the markets of Canada were monthly expanding.

Mr. King has ever shown by his policies that he is a man of action, an ever active solicitude for gain for the nation. In 1930, as administrator was always directed to the gaining of prosperity for the upbuilding of the country and when in the position of opposition under his guidance he directed with the same object in view.

Assess Leadership.

R. B. Bennett is a man who does not like to look back, he has been 10 to 16 hours a day, but is a man who for love of his native land, love for upbuilding and unity of the British Empire and service to his fellow citizens willing, gladly to serve devotes the best years of his life.

Mr. Willis paid a fine tribute to the late Hon. Arthur Meighen and to the awaiting the arrival of Mr. Shaver from the Committee meeting Ottawa, to address with immediate reminiscences of and laudatory reference to the various of his fellow members in the House of Parliament.

At Committee.

Mr. F. T. Shaver, M.P. for Hastings-Peterboro, the principal address at the meeting of the Thurlow Conservative Club in Committee and only spoke briefly in Belleville but what he did say was received and appreciated by those who heard him. Mr. McKeown voiced the sentiments of the Belleville Conservative Association when he said 'the trust that Mr. Shaver would soon be again in Belleville to address a larger audience.

A vote of appreciation for the attendance of Mr. Willis, M.P. for Prince Edward County and for their remarks was heartily endorsed.

Resolutions of sympathy to Mr. Hon. R. B. Bennett as Dominion leader of the Conservative party and the Hon. George H. Henry as Provincial leader of the party were heartily passed. The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

The Thurlow Conservative Club held their monthly meeting last evening at the Community Hall, Frankford, with the same speakers taking part in the program as addressed the Conservative Association in Belleville.

CIRCUS SIDE SHOW FOR TWEED COW

The circus sideshow sword swallower could not match Theo. Millville's cow of Tweed.

According to the Tweed Advocate it was butchered this week by Mr. Millville, the 1,500 pound animal was found to have one pair of scissors, a pair of shears, and a table knife in its stomach. From the appearance of the scissors it is believed they had been lodged in the animal's stomach for three years or more. It had always appeared to have been in good condition, with no goal-like tendencies.

Last week when he butchered another cow, Mr. Millville found three pairs of pants, with a number of safety pins and a quantity of collar buttons in its stomach.

WITH THE OFFICE SHEARS—

Once, Tommy Ward was dragged on in the columns of our contemporaries:

Gentleman in Wallerton says he has not had his watch cleaned in 32 years and yet it keeps perfect time. He has a buttonhole worked in his watch pocket to allow the fluff and dirt to pass out. Never heard of that before, did you?—Wallerton Herald Times.

Must be the same gentleman who first wanted quiet moved to the city, and passed the tip on to this contemporary's inventive genius.

A beret tam or whatever you want to call one of those soft hats was brought to the Guide; also a handkerchief and gold chain; also a little watch front with the crystal broken, the owners may have same if they get them promptly.—Port Hope Guide.

Sounds like a hoo down up Port. Hope way!

Municipal suppers are being enjoyed by many of the metropolis these days. The numbers are said to be plentiful down there, the menus, but they are hard to catch. However, a number have been captured and the lecturers claim they are mighty toothsome.—Amherstburg Echo.

Some pie 'em broiled!

Mr. Stafford Eight just arrived from the big city, Detroit, and claims it to be a little hard down there for business, so he thinks Walpole is the best yet. The Algoma merchandise was on to say Walpole Indian will go over to Algoma and that the name seemed to didn't matter the price, no more, no less. I think Mr. Stafford is right, Walpole is the best, so far.—Walpole Derry in Wallaceburg News.

But in New York its just as bad!

Mrs. R. Allen is not as well as they friends would like to see her.

The beautiful cloth was sitting in an imported creation of jade-green crepe trimmed with ecru lace around the panels front.—Beacon Times.

And then the editor left town!

TIT FOR TAT—

The story still goes the rounds:

A well known dentist, as it is said, received a package some days ago from a patient in the State of New York letter which accompanied the parcel explained: "We hope you will like the neckties we have sent you. Your address, and the fact that you are a dentist was all we had to go by. We are pleased with the courtesy we have shown you in personally selecting your ties, has been given us by a friend. Reckoned you will find the bill for $8.00." The dentist resolved on reprisals. From his work bench he took two old dental plates and mailed them to the firm with the letter: "Enclosed you will find my bill for $50.00. I shall expect to receive a cheque for $45.00 by return mail."

PETITION

TO THE HONORABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED:

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED CITIZENS, IN THE Province of Ontario, Canada, being a free and independent people, to whom rudder the parent principles of self determination, do hereby vigorously protest against the action of the British Broadcasting Corporation in censoring or attempting to censor the sacred teachings of Christ, as recorded in the Bible, such broadcast radio lectures on matters pertaining to the Bible and all public interest, and particularly the lectures of Dr. Rutherford, pertaining to divine matters. We have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, as it was first written, for the instruction of mankind, many sincere people claim that the Bible prophecyes apply particularly to them, and that they have membership in the present world distress, and disclose God's remedy for relief. We are taught to study these questions publicly discussed free from prejudice or bias. We therefore have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, as it was first written, for the instruction of mankind, many sincere people claim that the Bible prophecyes apply particularly to them, and that they have membership in the present world distress, and disclose God's remedy for relief. We are taught to study these questions publicly discussed free from prejudice or bias. We therefore have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, as it was first written, for the instruction of mankind, many sincere people claim that the Bible prophecyes apply particularly to them, and that they have membership in the present world distress, and disclose God's remedy for relief. We are taught to study these questions publicly discussed free from prejudice or bias. We therefore demand that the Dominion Parliament take immediate steps to instruct the Radio Commission the power, to refuse licenses to persons such lectures by radio and that the people be left free to determine what they may or may not hear. Men of world-wide fame and eminently qualified to explain the Bible, such as we believe Rutherford is, can be helpful to the people and we demand that our radio stations be permitted to publicly broadcast his lectures. The question is, Shall the people continue to enjoy freedom or shall a few men deprive them of their God-given rights?

Takes Place Vacated by Death of Rt. Hon. Mr. Anglin

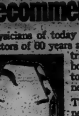
OTHERS APPOINTED

Eric Armour, K. C., And F. J. Hughes, K.C. to Supreme Court

Ottawa, Mar. 18.—Three major judicial appointments were made on Friday. Outstanding among them was the naming of Right Hon. Lyman P. Duff of the Supreme Court of Canada—brilliant legal mind and head of the Duff Commission which investigated transportation through the Dominion—to be Chief Justice of Canada.

Long an Supreme Court

For nearly three decades the new Chief Justice has sat on the Bench of the highest court in the Dominion. Frequently he has visited England, where he stands in the highest estimation as a counsel member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, of which he is a member. His appointment fills the vacancy caused by the resignation of Chief Justice Sir A. Anglin, who died recently.



Frank J. Hughes, K.C., Toronto, has been appointed a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. He succeeds to the vacancy caused by the promotion of Mr. Justice Duff.

Eric Armour, K.C., Toronto, has been named a Judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario. The new Justice replaces Mr. Justice G. H. Sedgewick, who resigned from the Supreme Court Bench to become chairman of the Tariff Board.

Mr. Armour's appointment was made late Friday.

Doctors of 52 Countries Recommend Fellows' Syrup

Physicians of today prescribe Fellows' Syrup as did the doctors of 80 years ago. Their experience with this time-tried tonic has convinced them of its body-building efficacy through its ability to replenish the essential mineral salts needed by weakened, run-down systems.

They know how effective it is in cases of nervous depression, how quickly it excites a dulled appetite, and induces both physical and mental vigour.

If you are under par, the mineral foods in Fellows' Syrup—calcium, sodium, potassium, iron, manganese and phosphorous—are just what your system needs to win back abounding health. At your dealer's! Two sizes.

AN EDUCATIONAL TREND

Training to find information in the newspapers of the day and to supplement therefrom knowledge in various fields of human effort is one of the modern trends in education. Many readers probably are not aware that the newspaper plays a small part in the work of the classes in trade and commerce and kindred studies at the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational High School. As a matter of fact Mr. F. T. Grafton, who is in charge of commercial geography, social history of England and the history of trade and commerce with the commercial problems does not fail to draw attention of his students especially in the commercial groups to the daily newspaper. For instance little bits of information casually appearing in the newspaper, as on salt, oil, coffee, fruit, are brought before the classes. Classes have their notes and if any additional information is brought forward through the columns of the press, this is added in explanation.

Not only does the student, therefore, go to the newspapers but he also goes to the films. The other day nine or ten classes witnessed a six hundred foot reel on salt.

Linking up the newspaper and the film with the acquisition of knowledge is paying a high tribute to the press and to the screen. It raises them to a standard which demands truth and accuracy. This is the goal of both these modern enterprises.

On the other hand this gives the student a correct attitude to the press as a record of events, movements and discoveries, keeps him from acquiring inaccuracy and inculcates a training of the eye as provided by the moving picture.

Education has changed so as to utilize every agency of progress and every movement to provide the young with a complete equipment of information and to train them properly to interpret information.

VALUE OF FISH

"Fish is one of our most valuable foods, and the consumption of greater quantities than are now in use is advisable from the standpoint of nutrition and the prevention of rickets and goitre," says Dr. J. L. Robertson, Deputy Minister, Department of Pensions and National Health, Ottawa.

"Fish and meat," says Dr. Amyot's statement, "contain the same nutritive constituents, namely, protein and fats. The protein of fish is essentially the same as that of meats, and is equally nutritious. As the muscle fibre of fish is shorter than that of meat, fish is more easily masticated and digested. Fish, in addition, contains vitamins and is especially rich in vitamin D, which is so necessary for the development of bone. The use of vitamin D prevents rickets. The content of vitamin D in fish oils suggests the importance of fish as a diet for the young.

"Sea food is of special significance in that their iodine content is higher than that of plants or flesh of animals. It is well known that goitre and the overdevelopment of certain swellings of the thyroid gland, known as goitre. Goitre is less prevalent among people in the vicinity of sea coasts than among inland people. This is due to the greater consumption of fish by the former. Nutritive authorities declare that the chief fish, oysters, crabs, clams and other shellfish is of greater value in certain respects than the muscle of meats.

"Fish is preserved by freezing, cold storage, salting, smoking, drying and canning. These processes, if properly carried out, do not materially affect the nutritive value.

"Excellent quality of canned fish is procurable in all parts of the country owing to modern methods of preservation. Salt and smoked fish are of great value, as is the roe of fish, which is considered a delicacy.

"Fish is one of our most valuable foods, and the consumption of greater quantities is advisable from the standpoint of nutrition and the prevention of rickets and goitre."

WIDEN WHITEFISH AREA

In less than two weeks at the outset of this year 21,000 pounds of whitefish were landed by few commercial fishermen at Birch Lake, northern Saskatchewan, a piece of water where there were no whitefish, as stated, until it was stocked with fry by the Dominion Department of Fisheries several years ago.

The Birch Lake case is another proof of the efficiency of intelligent fish cultural work in enlarging the fisheries resources of the country.

As compared with landings from Canada's major whitefish areas, a 21,000-lb. catch is not a great quantity, of course, but the point is, noting when it comes from a lake where these fish were unknown until fish culture operations started them growing. And, as a matter of fact, the landings could have been larger but the fisheries authorities thought it well to impose a catch limitation as this was the first season that fishing for whitefish has been permitted at Birch Lake since stocking was undertaken.

LIGHTHOUSE

By these high windows many a day at Long have I stood to watch the fog creep up,
The fog that is a soft, gray curtain drawn Between this tower and the round world's cup.
Far, far below I hear the wild surf boom
The angry wind comes roaring at the sill;
Pale shreds of fog are tossed into the room.
The moaning winds and waves are never still.

Almost it seems no certainty remains,
Beyond the fog's thick veils I cannot see;
I only know the shifting wind controls
The restless oceans shoots its threats at me.
As futile are time's menace and life's shock
My faith is like this lighthouse built on rock.

WILL ROGERS, cowboy humorist, philosopher, moving picture star and what have you, sitting right and tight in his beautiful bungalow atop of Beverley Hills, California, admits, sadly, and reluctantly, that California has at last had an earthquake, all other shakes being just the surplus energy of the sun-kissed. Heaven bless Will, rolling over, pushing things aside to get more room for further development. Yes, says Will, even the California newspapers admit that the shake was a 'quake. "We had an earthquake," admit the newspapers. "It was no fire, no tidal wave, not of the Democratic party, it was just an old-fashioned earthquake." Will builds up the following beautiful alibi for the visit of the 'quake to the coast:

"You see the Lord in his justice works everything on a handicap basis. California has been getting everything else, must take a slice of the calamities. Even my native Oklahoma (the Garden of Eden of the West) has a cyclone. Kansas, always blessed with its grasshoppers, must endure its politicians. New York with its splendors, Wall to Wall Street, and Washington, the world's most beautiful city, has a lobbyist crawling out to attack you from every manhole. Even J. P. Morgan is not sitting as pretty as he was, so divert hurricane and every place is equal after all."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S shrewd move in closing every bank in the United States at once had one very evident effect. It gave every one very vivid ideas on everybody just what a splendid and indispensible service the banks of the world are performing and just what a nuisance and awful thing limping this thing old-fashioned barter system is. Barter died of its own impotence many years ago and we have been trying to cover convenience of money and the universal banking system that they have forgotten to appreciate it. Now we are realizing that the necessity in a business world speeded up to such a high velocity. One business man from the west who arrived in New York Day found that he had plenty of cash in his note ing but checks in his jeans found that he couldn't secure accommodation at any of the banks in Gotham so he spent the night at the Municipal Lodging House, where he was served with soup and mulligan, just like the rest of the unfortunate derelicts who had floated in that day. Next day he was able to dash a cheque for one hundred dollars and moved to another hotel. He admitted, however, that the service at the Hotel de Hobo was all that could be desired, warm rooms, clean beds, and good food. So was the check!

WHEN THE WALLS OF JERICHO fell down as the result of sundry ram's horns, the tramp of marching men and other commotion set in motion by those who walked easy access to the city, it was considered a miracle. Now the great tariff walls erected around the land of Uncle Sam are crumbling before the onslaught of the victors at the polls who think that Uncle Sam will be the better for more friendly intercourse with his neighbors. Never did it pay. When Uncle Sam made it impossible for other nations to sell their goods in the United States the rest of the world decided not to BUY from Uncle Sam. WOMEN TOLD HOW TO MEET MIDDLE LIFE

Happily Married And Children Life is no Problem

BY LOUIS E. REICH, M.D., PH.D.
Famous Authority on Health And Psychology.

When a woman is happily married and has children, the middle life isn't much of a problem. Her day is likely to be crowded with what with cooking, household duties, planning of meals, mending, sewing and occasional attendance at a mother's meeting at the school the youngsters go to—well, that's the poor woman is too tired at night even to go to the movies.

Nevertheless, such a crowded life is also a useful one. It yields real satisfaction. Usually, too, the results of her labors are proof positive that neither her time nor her good intentions have been wasted.

But when forty-five or thereabouts gradually creeps upon a woman's horizon those changes, what is more important still, the change of life, she is apt to suffer as well.

When a mother has reached middle life we must assume that the children are already grown and that they are either at college, at work or married. At least their maturity has reached the point where no one is sufficient, while the mother begins to realize that her job as a mother is as complete as before; that, in fact, it holds no place for her.

Then arises a problem. Just what should she think or do in order to fill this gap? Many a woman still has her husband to look after, but probably even he is not as much about his meals, or even the dampening of his socks, as he was when younger. He too, has settled down; but he is better off than his wife, because his interest in his work is as great as ever, and the departure of his children from the home and the home routine because of it, do not affect him so directly and personally.

Travel, you say? An excellent idea for a woman past middle life, provided she and her hobby can afford it. Yet, like all things, it has its sides, one cannot travel forever. Nor does travel necessarily take the place of family in the expression of the maternal instinct, which is so strong in making the woman continue to feel that she is useful; a notion that becomes a necessity her life an obsession.

But what, then?

The answer undoubtedly must be that if a woman is going to fill the last minute, so to speak, she seriously courts disaster as mentioned. No the world's most beautiful city, has a lobby ist crawling out to attack you from every manhole. Even J. P. Morgan is not sitting as pretty as he was, so divert hurricane and every place is equal after all."

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

30 YEARS AGO

Many pleasure seekers from Belleville have flourishing Country Clubs where golf is the favorite game and where it is recognized that outdoor exercise, instead of that regarded as a luxury is an absolute necessity. There is no doubt many persons in this city would be glad to join a club which provides them with a chance to participate in such a popular game and as the times are interesting in the game of golf we can offer any suggestions towards the promotion of a Country Club are requested to be present at the meeting which is to be held in the council chamber at the city hall this evening.

MARCH 15, 1893

At a meeting of the Bridge Company yesterday the question of collecting the tolls on the Bay Bridge was considered at length. The lease made by Mr. Richard Arnots for $4,680 was the highest and only tender received. The term runs from April 1st, 1893, to April 1st, 1894.

Mr. Bll Wickett of Toronto, is visiting friends in the city.

Mr. Allen Jones, post office inspector, is in Belleville on official work and installed the new postmaster at Madoc.

Mr. Alex. Harris, grocer, will leave here on the 20th inst. for a three trip to the Old Country.

An old resident highly respected called home to the great majority last night in the death of Mrs. Ann Ferguson. She departed at the ripe old age of 83 years. Mrs. Ferguson is a cousin of Mr. Jas. Ferguson, a contractor of this city.

Mr. Alex. Hamilton, of Toronto, was in the city on business.

50 YEARS AGO

MARCH 18, 1883

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Smith of Thurlow are in town the guests of Mrs. W. O. Purse.

Mr. Jas. Reid has now a large supply of straw that it has been favored with as any one period of the late winter.

A party of Belleville men will leave here on Monday for Britannia Bay to work on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The market was well attended today and a large number of farmers was well represented on the streets. Saturday is a great visiting day.

Mrs. Lister has offered to sell to the city a piece of property for $50 feet, adjoining the waterfront to the lower bridge for $2,250. The offer is considered to be a very fair one.

Jas. Peoples, manager of the Cash Store, Belleville, at 294 Front Street, is pushing on a sale of dry goods and other goods in the clothing line.

"What Shall Be My Advertising Budget"

ARTICLE NO. 46

Merchants and Manufacturers often ask over the question of the percentage that shall be set aside for advertising to develop sales. They do not worry over this problem in regard to other expenses in doing business.

They do not say, how much money shall I spend for insurance, but tell the agent what insurance protection they require, and then pay the bill. They do not make it a theoretical question as to the cubic content of the store, but figure out what assortment of goods they need, and then look for a store that will give them the necessary space.

Unreasonably advertising is not guilty as charge, floor space, and even merchandising than insurance—yet these can long the ground moving in and out, store space is a liability and ingrance does not protect against the deterioration or change of style.

One hears of certain manufacturers who set aside a definite percentage of sales for publicity work. This may range from 2½ to 30% on insurance sold at a high profit, to less than 5% on certain necessities for which the public have a certain need, and all the manufacturer requires to do is to keep his name before the people.

In the retail trade there is a big variation between one store and another. One may deal with a certain trade can ask advertising to a greater degree, depending on inherited custom, and the people who throng the street. While another man who is in not so attractive a store, possibly on the wrong side of the street, but in the down town for the necessary publicity to offset the fact that he was not somebody's grandfather and has not a long established.

The tallest president of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, when asked what was the proper length of a man's legs, said "They should be long enough to reach the ground." And the correct advertising budget for a business, is to be large enough to do the work, yet sufficiently restricted to eliminate unprofitable and the expenditure of extravagance.

A sound basis of expenditure cannot be figured out accurately before hand. The merchant must spend the amount necessary to build a success, anything more than that is spending only a half way good or even a failure. However, as time goes on and methods are tested and results checked up, the merchant will have a comparatively basis for his work on five normal conditions.

An advertising budget, however, should always be elastic so that increased expenditure could be met if necessary to bring business. While if business was coming easier than anticipated it would be foolish to over spend, because funds could be conserved for expansion or future drives later.

A clever today marketing over a familiar road from one city to another, may be able to estimate what will be his gasoline expenses, but let him travel another 500 miles or an unknown road and figure on the mileage and gasoline will be all wrong. The same applies to the store, as unknown will increase his gasoline consumption, and many a merchant today by his advertising has found that he has a trade that he never knew well known as he would like to be.

As stated it is impossible to give any definite recommendation as to the size of an advertising budget, but realizing that goods unsold do not show a profit and that overhead goes on even if sales are limited, every possible effort should be made to make every word count, and the general term "Advertising" I would include anything that has to do with making your goods and your store favourably known to your possible customers.

It will hamper your business if you have to squeeze your publicity appropriation too tightly, but between the two evils, I would choose that raising than too large a budget which would encourage lavish expenditure. The best advertisements are those which are written to make every word count, with a careful study of the people to whom they are addressed and due regard to the value of each dollar. The most wasteful advertisements are those when the merchant has ample space and conditions but his ads will command attention and the matter contained in his message is, therefore, of minor importance.

A Cancelled Debt

By Danville B. Whitlock

A childhood romance, crucified on the alters of love, indurated by years of prison toil, aired in the court of law and sealed, sealed, sealed by publicity, will blossom soon when a gunman is released from behind iron of prison bars and and steal bars of the State's penitentiary into the arms of his sweetheart-wife, who left San Francisco to be with him again.

It will be a momentous day for Harmony Hall, ex-convict, highjacker and pistol-toter, Louise, a pretty little gunsl, who turned from the path of crime to be with her husband, and a prison term to win his freedom.

Behind the romance of Louise and Hall, the public will see the drama, the tale of a boy who "went hooky" the indomitable love of his woman which led him into the path of evil, and 'sen'life, a story of a girl who sacrificed love and home and all that life for love and in fact lived up to the code of chivalry.

The long dreamed-of day, the day when the Hall will be free again, the day when they will arise from the red into the gold of life and to the world be reunited. Then, on that day when their sorrows will be at an end, Louise, the original bobbed-haired girl will be remembered as an orphan, her real name unknown. Her big brown eyes, and pouting mouth, her ever ready smile and laughing baby in a foundlings' home in San Francisco. Those big bone one day in quest of a child to adopt, and to be named Louise. In the Autumn years, and it had been a case of love at first sight. The baby was named so by the lady and adopted her.

She grew, and soon Mess reach as Louise Farnold. On the adjoining farm lived Harry Dunlap whose son, Ross, was several years the senior of Louise.

As the little girl blossomed into a pretty girl of sixteen she was sent to a boarding school for several years things changed. Both Farnold and Dunlap were passed on to the Great Adventure. Their estate, defrauded of its rightful heirs was left to Louise. There had been many bills to settle and when everything was settled there was left for Louise and Ross but a little left but the ranch and small house.

Louise graduated from college. Ross had been written to her lately and there came the wonder bag the vanished the long silence. She was worried. Hadn't they been pledged sweethearts? She returned home. Mother Dunlap said that Ross had gone to the city, and she hastened to write a letter to the address given her. No answer. Another letter and a long silence; still no reply. Came a day when a visiting girl friends told her of hearing about Ross had in serious trouble. She hurried to the city with her small savings.

Ross had fallen in bad company and had drifted into the underworld had joined a mob of "heavy men" and been implicated in the hold up of a holdup, and was in the City Jail.

Without legal advice, friendless in the big city, a poor judge of the right and wrong, she was to meet the underworld. Louise visited her Ross in the City Jail, and in the bearded screen-room of the city prison.

She must have her man! There were no tears or sobs, no reproaches only on the verge of the street, but in the down deep for the necessary publicity to offset the fact that he was not somebody's grandfather and has not a long established.

The tallest president of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, when asked what was the proper length of a man's legs, said "They should be long enough to reach the ground." "HEY, YOU'RE CRABBING MY ACT!"

NERO FIDDLED WHILE ROME BURNED, according to news received from sources hitherto considered reliable, and also as depicted in "The Sign of the Cross" a la Hollywood, which, of course, is not strong addicted to the truth. Corroboration, however, seems to establish it as a fact that Nero was a fiddling old fossil, and no doubt he fiddled while in the city of Rome burned, when he was not otherwise occupied keeping from getting bottles. Nowadays a modern fire service would have prevented any such dramatic spectacle conceivable only in the brain of a mad monarch. Chief Jim would have been in the window of the palace in 2g time and even the fiddle of Nero would have been salvaged. Or Fire Chief Ed Wynn with his radio fire extinguishers—Oh! Oh! O—AND SO LONG UNTIL TOMORROW.

"STEP ON IT, MILADY!"

AND SO SIR WALTER RALEIGH solved the traffic troubles of good Queen Bess, and the walled dry-shod across the muddy puddle on Sir Walter's cloak. And did it have to go to the cleaners? Nowadays there would be no mud puddles and good Queen Bess would not have to muddy her shoes or sweep up the dirt after. In the mid-Victorian era, before the days of sewer up the dirt after. In the mid-Victorian era, before the days of sewer pavements and the motorized street sweeper and frequent scouring with fire hose kept the streets as clean as a parlor floor—almost—you know what I mean. SO-O—Queen Bess would have had to have a nice little run-a-bout or by her side, instead of having to walk amid the mud puddles. And so, it is well to consider these things when folks are bragging about the good old days — AND SO LONG UNTIL TOMORROW.

BROKEN HEADS FIXED WHILE YOU WAIT

PERHAPS YOU DON'T KNOW IT—but there are many people in Belleville and the surrounding district who DO KNOW IT and what they know is that B. W. Brown's Shoe Repairing Shops are more than shops where shoes are repaired—they are shops where service is rendered in many other ways. For instance—where do the ladies who use fancy colored leathers in the doing of novelty work such as purses, book marks, etc., get the leather they require?—the answer is at Brown's. The same applies to dome fasteners for gloves, purses and shoes. Then there are buttons in a large assortment for ladies' coats and suits—quite a nice business is done in this line as is also the case in shoe buckles, insoles, polishes, shoe dressings, dyes, shoe brushes and laces.

In addition to being termed the 'Shoe Hospital,' the Brown Shoe Repairing Shops are also known as the 'Doll Hospital' and the 'Umbrella Hospital.' Many a little lady whose doll has broken its head' has been made happy again by having it made whole and as good as new at Brown's and broken and torn umbrellas are neatly and strongly repaired so as to give to their owners long service in protecting them from the pouring or drizzling rain. So—you must acknowledge that Brown's Shoe Repairing Shops render to the public an excellent and varied service.

Mr. Brown is very particular about his shops — he keeps them neat and clean always. Recently his shops at 10 Campbell Street and 4 Bridge Street East, near the tower bridge, have been thoroughly 'house cleaned' — the interiors and the frame work of the machinery have been painted and everything is neat and tidy.

Persons who know say that the Brown Shops are the best equipped and neatest shoe repairing shops between Toronto and Montreal.

During the past twenty-five years Mr. Brown has given a 'new lease of life' to thousands of shoes and made them fit to 'walk' again the streets of Belleville or the country roads and fields.

In the city Brown's service is 'no further away than your telephone' and repair work, be it shoes, dolls or umbrellas is gladly called for and delivered. The service given is prompt—let B. W. Brown serve you.

Little Benny's Note Book

Last nite ma had liver and onions for pop an peeps to eat. If it would make me grow as satisfied he would leave us keep the puppy. Being just what happened and I said, Well O, now that he's our dog for sure, we will to have a name for him nite away. A dog without a name's no dog; I said and pop said The he's nothing but a nameless canine.

He ast to have an appropriate name that's the thing, ma said. Now for instance no's such a little bit of a thing we mite call him Midge. That's short for Midget and also for Short, you mite say, she said.

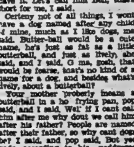
Well say O, me! he's not going to stay that little, so he'd soon grow out of that name, and we cant be changing his name all a time or we'll get him all mixed up and he wont come at all when we call him, I said, and pop said, Benny's right, he's call him Hen-and-Toe because he's always under somebody's feet, that's my idea of an appropriate name.

Aw gosh, pop, that's no name for a dog, I said, and pop said, But it would be if a dog had it, that's logical enough, and I said, Well O me! I cant have him Hen-and-Toe because I've got to call him Ben, that's short for me, I said.

Then my of all things, I wont have a dog named after any chile of mine, ma said, I like Jesse, ma said. Butter-ball would be a cute name, for him, I said, he's a little butterball, and just as lively, she said, and I said, Yay, yeah, that would be fawne, mast's no kind of a name for a dog and besides what's Jesse, short a butterball?

Your mother 'properly means a butterball in a bee hyving pan, pop said, and I said, Wel' if I cant call him after me nor dout we call him after his father? People are named after their father, so why cant dogs be? I said, and pop said, But yes gods, according to his pedigree his father had some snoot name like Duke of Wickenshire or Prince of Somethin, nothin, order.

Well I meant just Junior, I said, and pop said, Well that would be fair enough, that would be after his father, and I said, Yes, Junior is a nice name, this suits me.



Then it mited be more on account of not really meaning it for Benny Junior.

MOTHER... never give children a grown-ups laxative

If your child is fretful, listless, has no appetite — he probably needs a good laxative.

But — careful, mother! Many laxatives — made for adults — are far too harsh in action for the sensitive system of a little child. Yes, even "reduced" doses!

Give your child the laxative made especially for children — Castoria. It is gentle, safe yet very effective. It does not gripe, contains no narcotics, and children actually like to take it! Purchase a bottle today — at your druggist's.

Fine Acting in Irish American Play Presented at St. Michaels

Eight Hundred in Audience Delighted With Work of Players

St. Patrick's Day was brought to a fitting climax when the spirits of about eight hundred of the population of Belleville rose to heights of delight with the successful presentation of an Irish-American play, "Tuning the Tracks" which was given under the auspices of the Children of Mary at St. Michael's Auditorium last night. The annual festival of the saint is an occasion when the people love to enjoy to the full their freedom from the restraints of the London season. This day havoc is always a great day in local history and the jovialness and exuberance of the spirits of the people required but that feeling which was caught by the actors in this very clever presentation of the life of an Irish family which had become rich in the United States magnate.

Clever Play

The play itself is extremely clever in its dialogue and its lines, and in the series of situations which present themselves as the plot unfolds. Doing it as clever as it was, and a good company could make it succeed. And that is what happened even though the actors in this play threw a wrench in the works to study the parts and to create a semblance of fact. Under the direction of Miss Jessie D. Wood, the players seemed had learned their lines and roles rapidly, so rapidly as to surprise everyone.

The story is that of a family, the father of which is a "has been" in the mains natural despite illnesses in wealth. Through his daughter's love from the restaurateur of life he follows. Michael Casey (Jack Dunn) who is taken up with poodle dogs, mediocre, and some days even to changing her name to Mary Lee to Marie, Annetta, and to seeking to make a social climber of his wife by name. One daughter remains at home, Mary Lee (Miss Ruth Mangle), who is interested in society, world of wealth and fashion, that is evident. Her sister, Annetta, who follows the mother's lead, "Mitchell" (Miss Gertrude Stock), who is the name of Casey, the escape of Stock, and to have gone, and the other sister, Mrs. Patrick, pretended Bolsbeuik, with the Bolsheviki, the undertaking of the modiste, and the disgrace of the father—that the crooks should be induced to go to jail—is done the family a great favor. Up to the last the plot is kept in suspense until the father decided that there should be a [illegible] of the two members of the [illegible].

Real Actors

Howard B. Lally as Patrick Casey, was splendid. He played his part with reserve and naturalness and understanding to some throughout. Dalhousie Smith, Jack Dunn, as many fine portrayals in the past, and he lived up to his reputation in the role of Mason, the maid, who showed a fine touch as the maid but the daughter of a friend. Miss Mary Cleary took the very difficult role of the mother, Mary Anne Casey, educated by the modern freedom of the times, and she commands upon the player, there was the slightest suggestion of overacting while McLellan really putting life into the character of Mitchell, who made a capital Maggie, daughter of Mary Casey Stock, played by Miss Stock was sensible and sane as the father. Estelle Lynch, as Kathleen, had a role requiring much skill. Miss McLellan's and she played it delightfully. Gerald Gallagher as the son, who had erred through extravagance, but who, through contact with scoundrels, is the possessor of a fine character. Mr. Gallagher had the part of Madam Bolsbeuik, and he interpreted the need the new freedom as a lever to his own ends. The role was played by

GRAIN SALE RELENTLESS

Wheat Futures Pushed Down Further at Winnipeg

Winnipeg, March 18 (CP)—Relentless selling pressure, through on a lighter volume of trading, again was exerted out by sessions in the Canadian Grain Exchange here today, with wheat futures prices steadily downward in regular and May deliveries during the forenoon today. Trading at times was dragged and fairly quiet, but there was no relief from the drying-up of offerings.

Wheat was lower at the session values were 3-4 to 2-8 cent lower, May closing at 54 7-8, July 52 1-2 and October 53 7-8. Little support was in evidence but some scattered buying, presumably for export interests, lifted values fractionally from intra points. Shortly after the start prices had sagged to one cent under the previous close.

Offerings today again came from country interests and Chicago traders.

Liverpool quotations moved hesitatingly throughout to close 1-4d to 3-8d lower. Broomhall reported 1-2 point lower for nearby Australian parcels.

FINE PRICES AT AUCTION

Seed Exhibitors and Officials Are Very Much Pleased

The sale of the seed and grain entered for competition at the 6th annual Eastern District Seed Fair was carried out by auction in the Armouries, Belleville, on Thursday afternoon, C. O. Tice as auctioneer. The prices obtained were encouraging to the farmers' seed, judging by exhibitors and officials alike. This registered seed is all grown in the eastern district and sold without goods imported from the United States, and the quality of many crops in this area. The sale in no small way was a result of the many meetings and fair also proved a means for farmer growers to trade seed with agent in in this connection.

Although the attendance at the fair was not up to the anticipation of its originators, the interest displayed by those who did attend proved its worthwhileness and the prizes awarded by exhibitors of the seed and grain entered as well as the different classes of judging in competitors well satisfied that they had been justly treated. Judging from the time and labor expended in the preparation of their various exhibits, W. J. Leonard, Hamilton, district seed inspector and to Jos. Wilson of Stirling, were in a fine humor. Representatives who acted as secretaries, clerks, etc., in the grading operations for the formation of plans and the carrying through of the fair, and exhibitors are most laudatory in their remarks concerning these officials. March of Belleville, under whom the fair was carried out by Mr. Johnston who is also supervising the final cleaning up of the show.

MANY FOWL ARE OFFERED

Eggs Sold as Low as Fourteen Cents Dozen

Steadily dropping in price until they sold at 14c a doz. in a dozen, eggs declined Saturday morning at Belleville market, although the top was the lowest figure paid on the local market. Poultry also declined and uniform orders for the first winter months the sharp decline in prices. There was also no little amount of controversy during the forenoon between buyers and those vending. Butter sold at the new price of 26c a pound.

Many poultry offerings were observed for sale and their plentifulness no doubt added to the declining market in price, when fine young chickens sold for 40c and 45c a pound, and much larger hens brought from 70 to 80c each according to their size and weight. Many of the birds cooking was also offered for sale and potatoes, turnips, carrots, pickles and other home prepared vegetables lined the counters.

The outside market saw many thrifty house wives take advantage of the fine weather and considerable business was transacted. Many new hens of the season, beets, carrots, turnips and potatoes brought 25c to 30c each while the scarcity of onions brought their price of sale up to 40c a peck. Cut flowers for sale by a lady, however. Some little business was done in the growers of hot house vegetables from Trenton, Belleville and Frankford a bunch with lettuce and radishes selling for 10c a bunch. Fresh eggs and carrots were also offered for sale.

Examples of seasonable apples such as MacIntosh Reds, Spys, Talman Sweets, Greenings and Baldwins, sold for the usual price noted. Numerous loads of coal wood cut into stove lengths were offered for sale on the south side of the market, while in the north side of the road and two fish merchants also carried on a brisk business for the hours of business.

The usual market quotations were; Beef carcass (cows) 7 to 8 cents; beef steers 9 to 10 cents; beef hind quarters 9 to 10 cents; hogs, live cwt. $3.50 to $4.50; hogs dressed, cwt. $5.50 to $6.50; veal 10 cents; lamb 9 to 11 cents; mutton 6 to 8 cents.

"Imperials" of Trenton Lone Occupants of First Place by 1-0 Win Over Cobourg

"Rene" St. Denis' lone counter when in three home games Ken Baglin's rebound, after 57 minutes of hectic hockey, proved to be the winning goal for the Trenton "Imperials" over the Cobourg "All Stars" in the second game of the double-header staged at the Belleville arena after the Maple Leaf entry had come out second best the last year's champion Picton club by the score of 4 to 0 in the opening game. The win put the Imperials over Cobourg LaBrash's "Imperials" from Trenton into the top flight of Mac Gerald's Cobourgites by the score of 1 to 0. Both games in the Belleville and District League were closely fought with the second till being one of the best games played in Belleville this season.

The rubber-match saw a new threat tossed into group "B" of the league when the "gold and blue" team from Madoc outplayed the Prince Edward team throughout and took home a 4 to 0 victory. Cobourg, Picton, ex-Belleville junior O.H.A. goalie, has his share of the credit for victory as this lad thwarted all and sundry efforts of the Picton forwards and literally rose to heights in the second and third periods when the lowest scoring four forwards in the offence to try and pull defeat into victory but the strength of the efforts of Scopa the "Northerners" were able to journey Southbone with a well-earned win.

Don Wrylock proved to be the best of the two goal tenders to win winners while Henderson, and Armstrong formed the best of the forwards and Alex being the fastest man on the ice. Watson was the best of the defence and by the losers, while West played good hockey for the club.

The Madoc club scored twice in the initial period, when Armstrong tagged one on Alex's pass and Jimmie Watson scored on a solo effort. Don Wrylock's sole effort was the only goal registered in the middle frame with Armstrong scoring the fourth goal on Henderson's pass in the final minutes. Hughes, Watson, Haddon and Boyle looked the best for the losing team. The lineups:

Picton—Goal, Patterson; defence, Church and Hodgins; centre, Mayhew; wings, Welsh, and Madden; subs, Short, Wylie, Boyle and Hughes.

Madoc—Goal, Scopa; defence, D. Wrylock and Phillips; centre, Henderson; wings, Armstrong and Hobday; subs, Hine, Watson, R. Wrylock and West.

Referee—"Bouncer" Holway, Belleville.

Night Cap Affair.

The second game between George LaBrash's Trenton "Imperials" and the Cobourg "All Stars" was one of the bitterest fought struggles seen in Belleville this year. Both teams travelled at top speed throughout with the ultimate result that the patrons were treated to a real game of hockey. The win proved quite costly to the unspoiled "Rene" St. Denis services of their alternate right wing player, Ken Baglin, who also had a fractured shoulder in the first period when he collided with P. "Hoot" Gibson. Although Baglin's injuries was quite accidental but Miller will be lost to his club for the remainder of the season. The win places the "Imperials" high atop of the list, position in group "A" with Chris' Garage of Belleville, Madoc and Frankford being tied for first place in group "B".

After 57 minutes of break-neck speed hockey "Rene" St. Denis, a cast off of the Belleville intermediates was the hero of the night when he batted home Ken Baglin's rebound to the only score of the night and gave the Trentonians a well deserved victory. Both goal tenders played stellar hockey in this game and literally rose to heights to stave off what looked like certain goals at times. Yarr and Bowen carried the brunt of the work on the Trenton defence with George Flinn and Karl Begin looking the best of the forwards. Powers and Johnson proved the best threats of the winners' forwards.

For the losing club Archie Campbell at centre and Gerald Bolton at defence looked the best. Campbell turned in the best game that was literally robbed by Chambers time after time when he skated in to test Trenton goalie. Gibson, High Bolton and Campbell were the shining lights of the losers. The game was one of the fastest seen in Belleville this season as the Belleville District League of which another double header featuring Belleville vs. Campbellford and Picton vs. Stirling attraction will be played on Monday night. The lineups:

Cobourg — Goal, McCoubry; defence, E. Ritter and G. Ritter; centre, Campbell; wings, Iley and Gerald; subs, High, Henderson, Gibson and Baker.

Trenton—Goal, Chambers; defence Yarr and Bowen; centre, Flinn; wings, Bohan and Begin; subs, St. Denis, Miller, Johnson and Powers.

TEN SENIOR TEAMS STILL IN RUNNING

Niagara Falls Win Senior O. H. A. Title

Toronto, March 18 (CP)—Ten of Canada's senior hockey teams remained today on the trail to Vancouver and the Allan Cup, hourly reckonings of the scores that started the season pointed for amateur hockey's symbol of supremacy as a result of last night's games that saw sensations emerge from the districts.

Montreal Royals prepared to take their newly-won Quebec title to the Maritimes to play Allan Cup honors with Moncton. Herwin next Monday and Wednesday. Montreal entered the fight for the Junior Cup when best Quebec Grantite 3-2 in the second game of a two-game series with the intermediate challengers at Quebec and took the round 8-4.

Moncton coasted to the beartime title by eliminating Sydney in the semi-finals with an 8-0 triumph in the final game to take the two-game round 11-1. Moncton relied mostly at protecting their lead and saving themselves for the encounter with Quebec's titlists but took advantage of every opportunity to score enough goals to win the second game.

Falls' Title

Gordon Peterkin's goal on a pass from Max Bentley was enough to give Niagara Falls the Ontario Hockey Association senior title. It started the last of their three-game series with Port Colborne after each had won one game. Peterkin's goal came in the second period and was the only score in the hard-fought game.

Hamilton Patricias developed opposition for Niagara Falls in Allan Cup play when they eked out their margin from the contention 6-3 last night after winning at Toronto 3-1 in the first game. Date for the clash between Niagara Falls and Hamilton was put for the Monday night in the O. H. A. Pats' victory gave Hamilton a second chance at Dennison Stanley Cup, the Senior B. team supplanting the Tiger A. Seniors.

Saskatchewan's titlists, Saskatoon Quakers, remained undefeated champions tonight on home ice in the second of a two-game series with a two-goal lead on the round. Saskatoon winners will play either Port Williams or Fairbank Memorials in the finals tonight at Port William in the first of a two-game round.

Defenders of the Memorial Cup and Dominion Junior title, Kitchener Wolves take on Newmarket, newly crowned O.H.A. immortals at Toronto this afternoon in the first of a three-game series, winners to meet Ottawa Rideaus, Ontario Valley champions.

Timmins and Port Arthur carry their dispute to Winnipeg tonight to decide which will meet Fort Belle Isle in Western Canada's Abbott Cup finals and challengers to the east's Memorial Cup representative. The first game at Port Arthur ended in a 1-1 tie.

Belleville Title

Belleville's Intermediate O.H.A. title was won by the Belleville Intermediates when they defeated Campbellford in a two-game series with the intermediate challengers at Belleville and Campbellford.

Belleville won the first game by a score of 4 to 0 in the Belleville arena and the second game by a score of 1 to 0 in the Campbellford arena.

Belleville's goal in the second game was scored by Ken Baglin on a rebound from a shot by Rene St. Denis.

Belleville's lineup was: Goal, Wrylock; defence, Phillips and Hudgins; centre, Armstrong; wings, Hobday and Hodder; subs, Hine, Watson, R. Wrylock and West.

Campbellford's lineup was: Goal, Ritter; defence, Bolton and Campbell; centre, Gerald; wings, Bohan and Begin; subs, St. Denis, Miller, Johnson and Powers.

Knocks and Boosts

The possibilities of future hockey and hockey players are assured any time Canada's best talent is turned in their teen age boys, who aspire to be hockey players of tomorrow. It is with such feelings, that we submit reference to the Belleville K-I-Jr. results changing.

In 1923 J. E. Sherit, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. entered a local team, the only team from Eastern Ontario Juvenile League under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Interest and the Y.M.C.A. This team of youngsters swept all before them and won the Speckled Sweater, which was donated to the winner of the league. Again this year a team was organized and although they were allowed to use one player from the season opened, managed to pull out a tie with the fast Riverside team. Last night the third time-limit finished competition in the Ontario Juvenile League for the cup later played the Kingston Collegiate for the Limestone City and then defeated Niagara Juvenile Intermediate, the latter's toughest opponent in the series. Then they met the champion juvenile club of the Queen City and they defeated them in Belleville and on Thursday night in Toronto to take home with them the Island Town, thereby winning the championship of the league for the second time in three years. Something more than mere words are due these boys for the way they upheld the calibre of Joe Sherit's K-I-Y organization and they suffer no single defeat during the season.

In looking over the line-up of this year's Belleville Junior Cube we were a product of the local K-I-Y and Y.M.C.A. clubs. We were glad to bring forcibly to the minds of the local citizens that the possibilities of juvenile hockey, in any city such as Belleville towards the building up of real junior teams for O.H.A. competition. At present the local boys are all on the champion Belleville juveniles ready to defend their title with the Cube next season and by the time the 1934 season rolls around perhaps some of the present stuff may be moved sufficiently to catch a place with the senior O.H.A. team and normal support towards senior hockey. Those kids play a pretty fair brand of hockey and are giving 100 per cent all the time. Remember, today are the juniors of tomorrow while the juniors of today are the intermediates of next year and so on". According to this reasoning of evolution the centre of interest should be in the juvenile ranks as the foundation of all hockey in any man's town.

Well we see where these two old rivals Belleville and Campbellford tangle in the night-cap affair on Monday evening when Bolton and Trenton break-up in the opening game of two scheduled Belleville and District League games. Bill Green and Alan Meagher have been named as officials for the evening by President Jacobi! With the Maroons in second position plenty of action is assured during the fifty-two stretches of the night. There will be a special train from Trenton to Belleville K-I-Y Jr. Maroons.

Teddy Reeve in his "sport classic" of the Toronto Evening Telegram in reference to the Reeve following paragraph which we took the liberty to forward on to our readers:

"E. C. Wickman drops us a line this morning to disagree with our crack to the effect that amateur rules make for monotonous hockey. He likes fighting, the rougher the better, rules and on last night's game in point. Well, he admit he has an edge in the argument. Anyway, he is with all the way from Belleville to the Gardens to see both amateur and professional matches, so we refuse to debate further with such a keen hockey fan."

Although neither Belleville team got in the semi-finals of the O.H.A. playoffs Belleville and District can take heart, for no Belleville player, former or on the ice, were the hero's of the night. During the certain-to-be-famous Eastern Canada final goal for the Belleville Cubs last year, was obtained by Jack Ferguson who stood between victory and defeat when he "Northern" goaltended. Picton 4 to 0 and Scopa certainly looked in a wonderful exhibition of goal tending. The kid deserved the credit, as he tended the last game, but he also had the privilege of seeing him work.

During the senior game, when George LaBrash's Trenton "Imperials" squeezed out a one to nothing win over the Cobourg "All-stars" in less a personal way than "Rene" St. Denis hogged the limelight by batting home the winning counter, H. Ritter, Cobourg defenceman, had a fractured shoulder. He took last today in the hope that he will be able to play.

One could not pass without mentioning the stellar work of all four goal tenders in the O.H.A. series every goalie excelled himself during the five games with the honors going to the fans experienced plenty of thrills and excitement. Scopa, Wrylock, Patterson and Ritter have you, bringing the cash customers to their feet many times. You certainly are deserving of better patronage than the local Memorial Cup receipts in the hands of the fans as the second game last night was a quality game as any intermediate game seen here this season.

The accident which befell Bill Miller of the Belleville team was unfortunate. Miller accidentally collided with "Hoot" Gibson and sustained a fractured shoulder. He was examined at the office of Dr. J. J. Robertson and will be operated on at the Belleville General Hospital on Saturday, so writes was the break.

EXPERTS DON'T LIKE DECISION

Believe Dundee Had Better Than Draw With Jeby

New York, March 18—(AP) — Vince Dundee's bid for a share in the world's middleweight championship has failed in the light of official decision but not otherwise.

The veteran Akron star, a leading contender for several years, belted out what looked to ringside experts to be a decisive victory over Ben Jeby in a 15-round bout in Madison Square Garden last night but got only no better than a draw, when the official verdict was read.

Jeby, defending the title for the first time since he received New York State boxing commission's technical knockout victory over Frankie Battaglia of Winnipeg here in January, was on the receiving end most of the way. In the opinion of the first four rounds but thereafter Dundee dominated the battling and clearly seemed entitled to the decision and the championship. The New Jersey fighter slugged Jeby in the third, 12th and 14th rounds, battered his face badly and had him bleeding from the nose and lips in the closing rounds.

Nearly 11,000,000 pounds of copper were shipped from Alaska to the United States last year.

Niagara Falls Win Senior O. H. A. Title Defeating Ports

Gord Peterkin Scores Only Goal in Fast Game

Toronto, Mar. 18 (CP) — Championship of the O.H.A. senior "A" hockey group rests today beside the cliffs of Niagara, "Niger" Niagara Falls fast-skating Cataracts lifted the title in the third and deciding game of the three-game series last night when they scored a 1-0 triumph over Port Colborne here. Niagara Falls will now meet Hamilton, winners of the senior "B" group crown, and conquerors of Timmins, N.O.H.A. senior title holders in the second round of the Allan Cup play-downs.

Each team had previously won on home ice to necessitate a third game for the championship. Cataracts scored a 3-2 win at Niagara Falls but Sallow evened the series with a 5-3 victory at Port Colborne. The Falls finished fifth and fourth in the league standing but gained the title bracket by eliminating the Toronto Marlboros and Hamilton Tigers in the semi-finals.

Peterkin Scores Goal.

Gordon Peterkin scored the winning goal last night in the fifteen minutes of the second period. With "Fan" Hentzer in the penalty box for tripping, the fast little Portsider, playing on his wrong wing, whipped through the Port Colborne defence and batted a rolling puck past Moore. Max Bentley was given an assist on the play, having passed to Peterkin in mid-ice.

Niagara Falls gave full value for a win and, indeed, deserved a wider margin on the play. Only the sensational goal tending of "Lucky" Moore kept the Cataracts at bay through hectic second and third periods. The brilliant work of Sallow in goals featured the comparatively listless first.

Outstanding on attack was the fleet first-string forwards of the Cataracts. Jerry Shannon, whirlwind left-winger, grabbed the major share of the honors with a series of spectacular attacks and a display of relentless back-checking. Comrades, Max Kaminsky and Gordon Peterkin, centre and right-wing, and George Hastie, alternate centre, was also prominent with his clever stick-handling.

The first period produced even exciting play but the last two periods of play was practically all Niagara Falls. The Cataracts had the edge in fire rifle drives at Moore's attacked in an unceasing parade and the tactic outshone was forced to remember his strongest defence to hold the lead. The second period was dominated by the Wilson-men.

HAM FROM TENNESSEE FOR REED BANQUET

Meiwe as Moonlight And Sweet as Honeydew

Oklahoma City, March 18—(AP)— Take it from State Senator Ed Reed, a taste for ham is a product of Tennessean in the Oklahoma Legislature. Surrounded by a "ham and supper" for them next Tuesday night, Senator Reed had this to say of the meat.

"The ham is from Tennessee. It is the left ham from a hog that was fed on moonshine mash, butternuts, persimmons, honeydew and apple-jack, as mellow as moonlight and as sweet as honeydew and makes a man love his mother-in-law."

MR. PICOBAC TAKES TO THE ROAD . . .

Having hidden good-bye to his wife and literally torn himself out of the arms of his home town cronies, Mr. Picobac, ensconced at last in the smoker of the day coach, felt just a wee bit flurried.

"Golng up to London on a little business," explained he to his fellow-passengers—"Picobac business."

"Seemed to have a hard time getting away," remarked the drummer for a line of synthetic silk stockings, guaranteed to wear and wash like iron.

Mr. Picobac smiled. From his vest pocket he produced a pipe and blew through the stem. From a pocket under his coat tail he extracted a handy pocket tin of Picobac, and held it out.

"Do any of you gentlemen smoke Picobac?" enquired he. "The pick of Canada's Burley Crop, grown right here in sunny southern Ontario. Try it. We've got lots of time now for a mild . . . cool . . . sweet smoke."

Mr. Picobac has accepted a commission from Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada, Limited, to make an investigation of pipe smoking conditions in Canada. He is now on tour. He will report what he finds as he finds it. Watch for his first report in this paper. Meanwhile, try Picobac if you want a mild . . . cool . . . sweet smoke.

—and don't forget, you get more tobacco for your money.

Pre-Game Comment as to N. H. L. Teams Take Ice

Toronto, March 18 (CP)—The week of the National Hockey League's schedule throws eight teams into action over the weekend in two Saturday and two Sunday games that may settle the question of who meets who in the Stanley Cup playoffs and the league championship.

Detroit Red Wings have to win their last scheduled game Sunday afternoon at Chicago to finish first in the league's American section provided Boston does not do Canadiens at Montreal Saturday night and Rangers do no better than tie the Maroons at New York Sunday.

Toronto by making a clean sweep of the season's games with Ottawa in tonight's game would clinch first place, for though Maroons could tie them in points, Toronto's greater number of victories would give them first place—all provided other games result as indicated.

The net result of games ending at scheduled would give Montreal virtually certain play-off qualification over the idle Americans and leave only Rangers and Boston to determine which should finish second in the American group.

NEWEST COSTUME JEWELRY HORSEY

Designers Turn to Hunt, Race Track And Bonfire

Chicago, March 18—(CP)—Some of the newest costume jewelry is horsey.

Designers hunting for something novel in this automobile age have turned to the animal, both real and even old Dobbin. The result is a line of jewelry embodying ribs, bridles, riding crops, horse shoe nails and other equine accessories.

There are bit-and-bridle brooches, pendants and bracelets of bright colored composition linked together with metal, portraying a snaffle or bar bit. Other new bracelets are of leather straps decorated with ornamental horse shoe nails. Such nails also are designed into rings and tie pins.

Small round colored pictures of horses and hunting scenes, covered with glass, are mounted in metal ornaments on pins, bracelets, rings, even necklaces.

Of all the senses I am sure that sight must be the most delightful.—Addison.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

Stanley Sa Si-Ma hiking for Hollywood turned his collar up against the cold, drew his hat lower over his eyes, and cursed the inhospitality and untrustworthiness of mankind in general. His immediate problem: to spend less than he earned. Already he had a thousand dollars in the bank, left him by his father. The weapon with which he proposed to accomplish this was fish. So was a man of forty-five who had been successful all of their own countrymen in Seattle, ever since he had come to this country and had established a fish business which had prospered and grown with the years.

Conversation in this direction attracted themselves as best suited to their business. Sam naturally became one of the interesting characters in the city. Not that he was particularly handsome, or even particularly ambitious and some of his friends were inclined to think him a little dull. He was a college-bred Chino-American in both his breeding and education, his experience was a target at which fortune, fate, and circumstance had taken aimed a thrust. Cunning plans were laid for his undoing, but by sheer luck or enterprise, not all of them were unsuccessful. Sam regarded them with the look of derisive pleasure in exposing their misfortunes in which practical jokers proposers. In this he had some success as a comedian, but as time turned more sour. His gallantry constantly involved him in trouble. Even his attorney, during the divorce proceedings, was heard to declare that Sam was generous to a fault, nothing was sacred to them: that they were represented in the Mother was corrupt; their religion a mockery. Sam's thirst for fun was surely as a drum. As for himself, he had no restraints except those laid down by his honorable father's example and precepts, and nothing but his own desires.

Mr. Carter, his attorney, one day spoke to them of Sam's shoot the chutes in his client.

"Your boy, Sam Lee, isn't much like his father, is he? Lee Ying was one of the finest men it has ever been my pleasure to know."

Sam Lee nodded. "Yes. He isn't the Asian fellow I used to be."

"It's a matter of racial ancestry, in spite of all his education and his environment he left much more than his father was. He's charitable enough to his own race, but he's even more popular with them than he is with us. He's a generous, unselfish, malevolent towards everybody else. Sometimes I think he almost hates us. And Sam, I'm not sure that I don't, in the least, sin on that account. You can blame him?" Elsen inquired.

"The white people have been given him a pretty hard time. Can't hate them, too."

"No doubt. And I'm sincerely sorry for him. Somehow I've never been able to think of Sam as a full blooded. I never forgot what his father was for everything about Sam is Asian, not Oriental. The boy used to be different . . . I never could see that Sam he had a Western mind. And of course Lee Ying always spoke of him as master fine of the Celestial flower could make out what he meant. I said some time ago I'd tell me much."

"I'm doubtful if he was really Elsen said.

"Um-hm! But isn't. Lee Ying was a conscientious was honorable, a decent man: the one thing he dreaded most of all was that Sam would marry some white girl. No further degree of that."

Now that Sam was known to be in competition with his own race certain of his former college friends came to him with their acquaintance with him and among the number to see him one Wade Wade called on him a few days and announced in his breezy hearty way that it was high time he and Sam renewed the bonds that had united them at Stanford. He had been intending for some time to drop in and say hello to the old boy, but—you know! Sam certainly had been busy and his universality was because he had been fired. An injury sustained in a brawl precipitated his mother, and about all a man got out of them were bill and hospitalization.

Kicker was a stock salesman now and doing well. He was a year or two older than Sam, more aggressive and more extroverted. Five pounds heavier, too. He had come to see Sam about a matter that was of mutual interest. Would he be willing to go in with Kicker and him in a deal that looked like a sure thing? All that was required was a little capital.

Sam was willing. He was always willing. He had been waiting for just such a proposition to come along. He was not surprised when his old friend came in from the outside, but he was surprised when Kicker, after a few minutes of small talk, got down to business. Wade had not come to borrow money, however. He had come to borrow Sam's influence. After all, that was friendship, the memory of which Sam had cherished. Kicker knew that Sam had been highly sensitive to him and Richard Sherry Elsen—Wade. He wouldn't be where he was now if it hadn't been for Sam's help. Sam had been a power at Stanford. Good old Sherry! Just a fine fellow, but sometimes one never forgot a favor. He wasn't in a position to do anything for Sherry now, but he was considering in mind when a certain opportunity came to him. Perhaps Sam had a hankering to own a fish business of his own? Kicker was willing to finance him. Finally, tact smiled, vaguely suggested that Sam had been borrowed by stating cryptically that fortune favors the brave when it's not making big changes. So, sir. The little fellow took chances and had the big prizes always played safe.

We handle all stocks, mostly, in our shop, he explained. "And when a proposition is better than usual we recommend it to our clients. That's where the nourishment is: the public doesn't get in on the good things . . . until most of the jokes is gone. Understand? Well, we've got a sweet one, Sam, and I've put you in. I did it now how you like it."

"I never specialize, Kicker," Sam said. "Don't know what you're smart. I wouldn't let you specialize on me. I'm satisfied with that kind of a deal our group never specializes, it just drifts profits. I'll tell you how I'm: We've got an option on a big acreage in Texas, owned by some non-residents who don't know what a well. At least they think they're drilling it: as a matter of fact, it's down, finished, and we've got the oil in sight. The oil is there and the Standard will take the whole output at a figure that's a cool million and a half over our contract. The whole thing will be cleaned up in thirty days. I'm going to let you in for what I've put in and I'm taking this way to square my old account with you. You'll get a sure ten to one on your investment, say, boy, you ought to know I'd do better by you than that."

Sam was sure this was true. Kicker was looked a genius, an unselfish friend but Wall Street was a dangerous playground for an inexperienced investor. Of course if Kicker was as sure as he said he was, he claimed . . . On the other hand . . . Double and, besides, poor Sherry Elsen . . . Sam asked for a day in which to make up his mind. After more discussion, further explanation, renewed assurances of love and confidence, the friends parted. They wrung each other's hands at the door, Sam made the eight obeisances of brotherhood and Kicker's horn of plenty overflowed. Kicker would guarantee to stage a boardwalk beauty contest as a novelty novice . . . A form-fitting riot that would have to be seen to be appreciated.

They met again on the following afternoon and Sam greeted his call with a decided display of emotion. 'It's nice of you to get to all this trouble and bother for me, Kicker. I've been mighty rare in my life. Kicker, a man without a friend is a bowl without a fish—a tire without a rose."

"Exactly!" Wade helped himself to a cigar and to the easiest chair in the room, and then got down to it. "I don't want to rush you, buddy, but I'm in a hurry about it."

"I was raised on proverbs," Sam continued. "My father used to warn me against the evil heart with the same vigilance as the remarks of a snake charmer. In spite of the fact that your face warms me like the sun and your words of affection spoke in me a harmonious ecstasy, I nevertheless felt that I owed it to him to heed his admonitions. As a matter of fact, Kicker, therefore, I presented this proposition of yours, Kicker," Sam smiled queerly and Wade looked puzzled.

"Yes? Well I guess you found everything O.K.?"

"On the contrary, I found everything O.O."

"What d'you mean? I could have answered your questions. I'd put you next to this in strictest confidence, Sam. Don't hope you don't classify my motives?"

Fortunately for me, I did and I found them thunderfully, as usual."

"As usual!" The visitor paled and rose to his feet. "That's a nice thing to say to a pal. I don't give a damn what you found out or think you did. It's baloney. . . . Humph! This is such an insulting thing to serve me of doing favours for a friend." He turned to go but Sam said:

BUDGET DAY ON THURSDAY IS OUTLOOK

Sinclair Bill Withdrawn After Considerable Argument

NO NEW TAXES

Toronto, March 18 (CP)—Setting for the announcement next week of the budget of the Province of Ontario Legislature was almost completed this afternoon when Premier Henry got to his feet. Thursday was picked as the day, it was learned, more than half over, and there will be a regular hurry and scurry from now on.

Much legislation was wiped off the slate yesterday, three bills dealing with school matters being passed by Mr. H. H. Dewart, K.C., Liberal leader, being withdrawn after considerable argument. One was the Premier George S. Henry declared Dr. Dewart was trying to sneak through the idea of establishing intermediate schools in the province, which he said was a thing nobody would look over inspectors of the Department with a view to establishing municipalities in new areas.

Premier Objects

Mr. Dewart's bills would have provided:

"Inspectors" could not operate in any part of the province unless they paid fees.

That school districts to be left, and to do away, instead of five as at present.

Abolition of the requirement pupils more than 14 years old must attend school.

Premier Henry objected to every one of these bills, and Mr. Dewart declared "this is a poor day for a Government to sneak any power or privilege through the House."

The last few legislative hours of the week were taken by Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney General, who asked for the passage of Deputy Governors and K. C. Regulations Act, which he explained to the House and now Presidents Judges and the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor of Mr. Sinclair's motion, declaring the reduction of educational grants by the Province in the face of non-confidence in the government.

No New Taxes

The Budget, it is expected, will not be brought down for two hours or more after the House meets on Thursday. Premier Henry stated today that he anticipated no new taxes, but that he might close down the Assembly until the end of April instead of May as the Government had planned.

The House opened at 3 o'clock this afternoon, Toronto St. Patrick's Day, with Premier Henry in his seat, presently before the Bar of the House to present petitions he made to the House on Monday last, and which he introduced the Opposition Bill No. 1, the Sinclair Bill. The petitions dealt with the charges preferred against members of the past two years.

With this weapon, he intends to lop off about $500,000,000 from federal expenses.

Sold His Country for 50 Pounds, Charge Against Scots Officer in Tower

Lieutenant Norman Baillie-Stewart of Seaforths Accused of Plot With German Suspected of Being Foreign Agent to Procure Secrets

LETTER CONTAINED BANK NOTES?

"Marie Louise" Signature on Letter Mailed at Berlin And "Alphonse Poiret" Signature Brought Before Court-Martial in London

LONDON, March 20 (AP)—A charge that Lieutenant Norman Baillie-Stewart of the British army had "sold his country for the sake of £50," was made today by Major H. Shapcott, the prosecuting officer, in opening a court-martial against the young officer who has been a prisoner in the Tower of London for several weeks.

The general nature of the charge revealed Lieutenant Baillie-Stewart, an officer of the Seaforth Highlanders, allegedly planned with a German suspected of being a foreign agent to procure and communicate army secrets which might be useful to any enemy.

Major Shapcott produced a letter addressed to Lieut. Baillie-Stewart, signed "Marie Louise" and mailed at Berlin. It was said to have contained ten $5.00 notes. The prosecutor said he would introduce no words and no evidence that the writer had sold his country for that amount.

Code Suggested

The main charge is that between Aug. 1 and Nov. 13, 1932, Lieut. Baillie-Stewart communicated to Otto Wallenar Obst of Berlin "information which might be useful in an enemy". Obst is the man suspected of being a foreign agent with the meaning of the official secrets act.

It was in an effort to meet the charges by circumstantial evidence that the prosecution introduced the "Marie Louise" letter and some other letters from Berlin and from correspondents of the authorities after they had placed a watch on the Baillie-Stewart.

A second letter from "Marie Louise" contained four £10 notes, said Major Shapcott, and another signed "Alphonse Poiret" was mailed from Aldershot to Obst in Berlin last November.

"Descriptions" People.

"You will want to know who Alphonse Poiret is," Major Shapcott said, "I shall tell you. It is this accused's code. This letter is in his handwriting."

The letter requested that Obst use smaller seals on his communications to England, "because these large seals are likely to cause the curiosity of unscrupulous people."

HOUSE ROCKS LIKE CRADLE

Mrs. Langley of Whittier, California Tells of Experiences

Telling how her home rocked like a cradle, as an earthquake struck, in an enchanting way, Mrs. T. E. Langley writes to her mother, Mrs. Ida Mallory, of her recent earthquake in California. Mrs. Langley is a resident of Whittier, California, which is close to the quake zone. The letter is as follows:

Pic. 2, Box 302,
Whittier, Calif., Mar. 12, 33

Dear Mother and All:

Well, I got your telegram this morning before I was up, eating breakfast; it was around 8 o'clock and I could have got you right yesterday, but the banks have been closed in California for ten days, and Ted has had to trust out so much money that he has not got enough to pay for the telegram we sent you in return. We are in great fix now, with no money to work, but are closed and earthquake.

Well, today's been a bad 'quake that hit Southern California, and it still trembles. We had just come from church a while ago and we had a nasty shock. We had noticed two shocks since we came home. I don't know what to think of it and when it will end, but we thank God we are safe so far. Lena Beach, Long Beach, Calif., was here got the worst job and I don't want to go near there, as it is only five miles today and saw the destruction and know school where I taught there; the worst things were brick buildings. I would not live in a brick building.

On Friday at 5.57 p.m. we were all outdoors and Lena was picking flowers and a party drove in to get some water, as the water was off when all at once our house started to rock like a cradle and the earth was moving in waves. I just had to stand and watched our plank rock in like basket-ware. I ran to the gate place and went towards the oil fields and I thought the ground would tear and a terrific crash, and it would last about 30 seconds, then ocean and the damage started just after it left Whittier and we have had bad times ever since. We have never went to bed Friday, but we had no sleep. We went to bed Saturday night and I don't know what we did Sunday night, but I do not mind I would go outdoors and sleep; we have been outdoors and have not had any more trouble to sleep there. Eileen has been a nervous wreck; she just screams and nearly runs to her mother every time we have a shock. Ted thought she won't leave her daddy; he has to hold her. I felt a little shaky in church tonight because it was a high building and Elmer was shaking and did not feel it; no one would out. I just wish the whole thing shaking because we don't know what will come next.

Our house is about 26 dead and 1,000 injured. Of course the full number will not be known, as a person could bear the prisoners in the jail together, and there are more of them just prayed and had never been found. Some of the dead were people slop and think with all these terrible things coming on the earth. We are not afraid to die, but we want to live.

I was glad to hear you were all right. I remember Mrs. Bowerman's just got a new lawn planted, some grass-seed, shrubbery, rose bushes and flowers and we hope to get fixed up this year. We have also my baby chicks. Ted buys me my baby chicks. Ted buys me my baby chicks. Ted buys me

TUESDAY IS BUDGET DAY

Taxation Changes Expected Rather Than Tariff Changes

Ottawa, Mar. 20 (CP)—Parliament today begins one of the most important weeks in the session's history as the budget tomorrow is the big event of the week and, this year particularly, a big event of the session.

The interesting things in the second budget of the present Finance Minister, Hon. E. N. Rhodes, will be the taxation changes rather than amendments to the tariff schedules. Little change is expected in the tariff schedules. Little change is expected in the tariff fall in consequence with all governments the Dominion administration has found it hard to make ends meet during the time of financial stress.

When revenue falls short of expenditure there are only two things to be done, reduce expenditures and increase revenues by higher taxes. By rigorous economy measures the administration has cut down ordinary expenses but the cost of providing relief has proved an increasing burden.

Taxation increases put in effect at the last budget did not yield as much money as they were expected to and what means the minister will adopt to get more money for the treasury this year will be made known in the budget. A lowering of the income tax exemptions is one likely step to be adopted. Another is the abolition of a number of exemptions from the sales tax now effective.

NEW TEST FOR MONOXIDE GAS

Vapor in Small Quantities Blamed For Vague Illnesses

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 20—(CP) Carbon monoxide gas, colorless, odorless and deadly, has been revealed as the cause of a large number of "vague but serious illnesses" in a consensus of a new detection method which today had been announced by the executive committee of the Michigan Academy of Science, Arts and Letters by Dr. Adam A. Christman of the University of Michigan Medical School.

In the new test, discovered by Dr. Christman and Dr. Ivan Myers Massbara, makes possible the quantative determination of carbon monoxide in the blood, even when gas is present only in minute quantities.

Previously, Dr. Christman said, the only known leak detected this gas only when present in amounts ten times as large.

Experiments indicate that quinine can be grown in the Philippines.

COMMUNITY CLUB OF STIRLING HAS IRISH PROGRAM

Stirling, March 20—The regular meeting of St. Paul's W.M.S. was held on Tuesday afternoon in the lecture room, prepared by Mrs. Christie, the programme convener. Owing to the absence of the president, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Wray was appointed Secretary pro tempore. The meeting opened with the Lord's Prayer was repeated in unison. Reports were received from the various circuits and secretaries gave their reports and it was decided that Mrs. Wray and Mrs. Hall be the sponsors of the Baby band. Miss Gladys Robb is the pianist and Miss Christie, secretary. The Scripture lesson Proverbs 26: 13-28 was read by Mrs. Wray. Minutes of the annual meeting of the Conference, Branch of the W. M. S. were read by Mrs. Hall. "The Dominion of Canada" was given by Mrs. Wray, very interesting and educational, religious and political life up to the present day. Mrs. Hall's paper on "Early Days in the West" was very entertaining. The reading of "The Convert" and "The Liquor Traffic" were given by Mesdames Christie, Martin and Jackman which gave much room for thought. Duets were rendered by Miss Macklin and the Misses Benedictine closed the meeting.

St. Patrick's Day

The March meeting of the Men's Community Club was a night of real history as one of the most enjoyable. It being the time of St. Patrick's night, the color scheme of the decorations was green and white, the tables especially looking very attractive in the green and white with good things to eat. The ladies of St. Andrew's Church did the catering and certainly made a daisy of it served. Just before "Grace" was said Mr. John Gemmell, the "Chief" came in and sealed themselves at a table by themselves and three more "toughs" appeared and were also placed by themselves. Throughout the evening kept up a continual disturbance by these four and the chief helped to make things "lively". Community singing led by Bob Hannah, assisted by Mrs. Charlie Allen and his Commodores (the banjo) and Mrs. Allen at the piano, the main feature was the "Mock Trial" when a local man was charged guilty of fraud and wife desertion. Those participating were: Judge Coyle (C. H. Bastedo), Judge Ackenhead, (J. G. Lewtor, K.C.), Crown Attorney (Dr. W. Whitby), Prosecuting Attorney, (G. H. Geary), Attorney for defendant, (Dr. W. F. Wall), acted for the defense, two Detectives Brandon (Wm. Hannah) and Clifford Baker were present with all necessary equipment. Sheriff Munroe was the Sheriff. The Deserter Brandon (Wm. Hannah) the defendant, his wife Mrs. Henriette Young, (Chas. Allen) and his father-in-law, Mr. Young (Mr. Hannah's wife, Anna and Annabel (Messrs. Bert Hannah and Percy Allen) and Jack-Jenkins (Bill Jones and Jim Legrow), the husband (Dick Fallon) Coy, (C. H. Bastedo). Judge Ackenhead, (J. G. Lewtor, K.C.) Crown Attorney (Dr. W. H

COKE INDUSTRY

The production of coke is a branch of Canadian industry that has grown rapidly in recent years, the output for which full information is available in 1930, and in the five years then ended there was a rise of over 50 per cent. in the output. Returns published for 1931 indicate a decline, but the figures do not cover the whole industry. The year 1929 was high-er than 1930 and even partial returns for 1931 are above 1925. The report for September last indicates an upward movement, whereas September of 1931 recorded a downward trend.

Total production of coke in Canada in 1930 was 2,478,051 tons. This output was produced mainly by the coke and gas industry, but a small portion came from petroleum refineries. The output from the coke industry was 2,062,764 tons, from gas making 323,230 tons, and from petroleum refining 92,087 tons. From the coke and gas industry combined production was 2,385,994 tons, and the comparative figure for 1925 was 1,546,739 tons. The record output, figured on the same basis, was in 1929 at 2,677,581 tons. Corresponding figures for the coke and gas industry for 1931 were 1,822,792 tons. For September, 1931, the coke output for Canada was 126,000 tons, a decline of 6,000 tons from the previous month, but a substantial increase over 1930, also 126,000 tons, but it was an increase of 5,000 tons over August.

The quantity of coke made available for consumption in Canada in 1930 was 2,486,142 tons. This figure is obtained by adding to the Canadian production of 2,478,051 tons imports of 31,091 tons and subtracting exports of 23,979 tons. An analysis of consumption figures for 1930, based on returns of the industrial census, shows that during the year 1,302,234 tons of coke were used as blast furnace or coke pools charges, 96,415 tons as domestic fuels in manufacturing and 348,105 tons as fuel in manufacturing and mining plants. Thus, a total of 1,964,854 tons can be accounted for, available exports of industrial uses, and the balance of 1,520,288 tons represents the quantity available for use as domestic fuel, or in industrial establishments not within the scope of the industrial census.

SOMETHING TO TALK ABOUT

So many new things are happening in Washington that people have new angles of conversation. One of the novelties of the new life at the Capitol is the lack of red tape shown by the Roosevelt family, which breaks the tradition in a graceful manner that it makes the old styles look a bit silly.

This is doubtless so true to the life of the Roosevelt family that it really has nothing to do with the new deal. Social etiquette which is such a terrible thing, and to break which is such a flaw in manners and upbringing, they say, suddenly finds itself out of countenance. Let an uncle strapper lay a hand on the red Rose and he or she is ostracized but when the sincere strong man and the sincere and influential woman arrive on the scene they make a new etiquette, which abolishes much of what was so real and vital a week or two ago and today is in the discard as a silly old-fashioned piece of etiquette.

Mrs. Roosevelt is so natural in the new etiquette that she old looked natural in the formal, and in the game. Many will applaud her and hope she will continue to overrun the mere styles which have governed White House society before and dared to make them look ridiculous.

DATES FOR MARKERS

Here, as elsewhere, there has developed a considerable agitation in favor of a change in the date of the municipal election. Some one has put forth other suggestions, even a suggestion of a two-part payment of the licence. This much is certain, that if the limit is set for the first of the year few people will buy licences and others will delay buying them until the spring approaches.

With the change of dates due to decision to delay until March 15th, many drove cars to their shed and some of them have doubtless put their cars into winter quarters again until the urge to drive becomes so insistent that at last the licence markers are bought and the cars do come out.

Of course the percentage of cars driven on the highways and streets before springtime is not nearly so large as the number of those which come out with the spring rush. It might be well to be the part of wisdom to set a late spring date and then allow no driving after that with old markers.

This year those who bought markers early fearing the closure on driving by February 15th, either put them on their cars or did not put them on their machines until last week, when the month's grace was ended. Some of these buyers were irritated that they had bought theirs so early.

It is pointed out by one contemporary that those who have difficulty in finding the money were not effected much whether the date was March 15th, or February 16th.

The Department of Highways will probably do some thinking over this problem.

POET'S LOVE.

Poets have learned
(Oh, long ago!)
The wisest men
Make light of woe.

Poets have found
How lyres attuned
As in the fall
Of withered leaf.

So, it is well
That these can gain
Their happiness
In song's refrain.

That words they weave
In pattern gay
Can charm the cares
Of life away.

And beauty's self,
Whom they pursue,
Can bid them love
Always anew!...

ELEVEN THOUSAND TAXICABS constitute the fleet which enable folks so addicted to cruise about London, through fog and sunshine. It is thought that this fleet is too large for good service and suggestions have been made that a reduction be made through the five hundred licenses which expire this year. This hardly seems fair and it is likely that the usual laws of the business world will be permitted to deal with this situation, survival of the fittest. This recalls the Paris fleet of taxis and charabancs which were pressed into service in the war to rush troops to the front and thus stem the apparently irresistible march of the Teutonic hordes upon the city of Paris. Even the caves and holes beneath the city inhabited by the dreaded Apaches of Paris were combed for human fighting material and hurried to the front to stop the German advance. The taxi and charabanc fleet saved the day and the Apache army wiped out many a black mark against them by their courage and patriotism against the foe.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT but a horse has a long memory. One of the last livery stables to succumb to the march of motordom in Belleville was the Lafferty livery stable on Pinnacle Street, conducted for years by that good judge of horseflesh and lover of the animal, Archibald Mr. John Lafferty. Not so long ago this noted livery stable was changed into a modern garage —and so, as Ed Wynn, Fire Chief extraordinary, would say, the story starts. Gazing out of the garage waiting room window one day recently Mr. Lafferty saw a man leading a horse along the street. Gazing reflectively at the horse, all at once recognition came to him and he stopped in his feet, put out to the street calling "Baldy." The horse turned his head, also his body, jerked the rope from the hand of the keeper, and marched right into the garage, then out of a door leading to the rear, but where he should have been met with a smell of hay he was enveloped with the odor of gasoline. Dropping his head in disappointment the horse, turned his head in sorrow to Mr. Lafferty, who called him by name and gave the old horse a petting which was much appreciated. Fourteen years ago the horse left the Lafferty livery stable and for the first time in he had returned to the neighborhood. That he walked directly toward the place where his old box stall had been in the days when "Baldy" was the pride of the stable, even though the surroundings had all been changed, is remarkable, but it is a fact. "Baldy" is now twenty-two years of age and has his own ideas about this age of steel, steam and gasoline, preferring, no doubt, the happy days of long ago when boys and girls together used to enjoy a drive to Point Anne or Shannonville, or even as far as Stirling, over the glorious many tinted Oak Hills, or by the water of Oak Lake, nestling in its green-bordered bowl, a silver sheet of shining sheen—or perhaps a thought or two of the days when Madoc or Tweed Fair drew long lines of buggies and prancing horses along the highway, of the crowds at night, all the good spirits, of the races along the way, the occasional accidents—but over and above all, the memory of the good feeling, the happiness and comradeship of those days, absent now to a greater or less extent. Happy Days! will they ever come back again?

A small car collided with a motor-lorry, and, as it was clearly the fault of the car driver, he said: "Well, all I can say is that I'm sorry."

"Right—just listen to me!"

FEET PAINFUL AS RESULT OF NEGLECT ONLY

Foot Are Most Neglected Parts of Human Body

BY LOUIS K. HIRSCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Psychology

It is probably no exaggeration to state that the feet are the most neglected parts of the body.

People wear ill-fitting shoes, too tight, or too loose, too high at the heels or too low; or they change from high heels to low, and vice versa; or they wear stockings too thick or too thin, or none at all—and not always darned when they should be.

At any rate, it is small wonder that corns, bunions, and callosities take up the abode in common while it is likewise understandable that weak and painful feet should ever so often accommodate.

A callous plate and a corn are not identical. Callous skin contains no nerve or sensitive tissue. It is all hard, dead, horny, and heavy. But every corn contains both nerves and living tissue, and is therefore apt to get so painful and tender.

Callous plates and corns are almost invariably caused by wearing shoes that are too tight. Corns develop a point, and may likewise produce a dark skin surface on the soles. Callous plates usually grow gradually disappear if the pressure on the skin, which produced the callosity in the first place, is removed.

The practice of cutting corns is highly dangerous. An infection may easily result, and if it gets to the entire foot, even up the leg. There are many cases on record where blood poisoning resulted, also cases where a toe or foot had to be amputated in order to save the life of the patient.

The same may be said of water blisters, ingrown nails, abrasions on the skin, cracked heels, chilblains—all of which may be caused by a squeezing of the feet.

For the removal of a corn, one may try a mixture of fifty grains of salicylic acid and one-half ounce of collodion. This should be applied to the corn with a camel's hair brush for several consecutive days. In a short time the corn will loosen and the use of a knife is not necessary. In fact, the best way is to soak the foot in a hot bath for after such applications, then gentle rubbing of the part will suffice to remove it. In stubborn callous cases a poultice may be applied overnight.

Never should a blister or abscess be opened without using a clean needle which first has been burned in a flame. Usually the application of a sterile dusting powder and binding the part in sterile gauze will soon heal the part.

Ingrown nails are complicated. It is caused by enlargement of the sac which covers the joint of a toe. In advanced cases, pus appears in the pus present in this fluid sac. The pressure on the nail causes pain. Of course, be removed if this does not help the condition, a physician had best be consulted.

Weak arches and flat feet may cause a dragging pain in front of the feet and in the thighs. They may even be responsible for nervous disturbances, especially in women. An arch support is often necessary but this should be fitted most accurately, and usually should be modified after trying it out in the shoes.

Excessive perspiration of the feet may be most annoying. The use of talcs or odor removing powders is one and in the stocking, often corrects the condition. Daily bathing and careful drying of the feet is always of the best also are great aids to foot hygiene.

Think always whether your shoes or stockings are being kind to your feet.

AGING YET DIFFERENT

One and one make two. If the two ones represent identical things, then we have two of those same things. Nothing can be added together. After the second is taken, the first is left unchanged.

All human beings are alike in many ways, and yet no two are so great as to make it difficult to tell them apart. Some resemble each other more closely than others, in-deed. Identical twins are almost so great as to make it difficult to tell them apart. Some resemble each other more closely than others, indeed. Identical twins are almost identical. Even they, however, are different. There are also marked differences between the Negro, Mongolian, and sex which allow for every population to be classified into groups.

At the time of birth, each individual has certain potentialities. What becomes of the individual depends on the environment in which he is born and the extent to which he is developed by proper training.

Environment should be recognized. No amount of training would make every boy a good fighter. Nor could every boy be cut to the physical make-up whereby it is possible for him to run a mile in four minutes. Speed just as there are physical differences which are obvious to all, so there are mental or intellectual differences.

Many parents refuse to admit to themselves that their children differ from the child and expect him to do the things that is done by those who have a much greater mental capacity than that with which the child fails. His failures cause him to be discouraged, and he may not be apparent. Repeated failure leads to mental depression and frequently the basis of mental maladjustment in later life.

Intelligence tests are used as an excuse for failure to work hard. "It doesn't matter," we say, "I become them is part of the necessary training for life. The healthy person is the one who has developed to the full the capacities with which he is endowed and one who uses them to enhance the value of his work for himself and for others.

We are so alike in many ways that generic rules serve as a guide to health for all of us. Because of our differences, however, these rules need to be adapted to our own special needs.

MAY DEMAND APPEARANCE

Gordon Waldron Maybe Called Before "Bar" of House

Toronto, March 20—(CP)—Ontario's Legislature, for the first time in history, may have to demand by may demand the appearance of a man before the bar of the House. K. J. Murphy, Cons., Toronto St. Patrick, called the House to bring Gordon Waldron, prominent Kirkland Counsel, into the Legislature to refute charges he had attempted to bribe the effect Mr. Murphy accepted remuneration for drafting an incorrectly bill into the House.

Mr. Murphy declared the statements shamefully, and subsequently Mr. Waldron was quoted as saying that Murphy's charges were "entirely satisfied." This was followed by Mr. Murphy's statement that he would consent brought before the bar, and Premier Henry, head of the government would take heed of the plea today.

The last time the "bar" was used was away back in 1903, when Rector Charlesworth, now head of the Canadian Radio Commission, was a member of the press gallery and wrote a note to a member of the Legislature using an allegedly offensive term. Mr. Charlesworth apologized and the incident ended.

Mr. Murphy's charges in brief is problematical. It can order a subpoena appointed, however, and Mr. Waldron would be required to appear. If the committee decided Mr. Waldron shall appear in the House, he will be marched before the bar of the House by the sergeant-at-arms. The speaker is then to question the Mr. Waldron in that event.

Should the Waldron-Murphy incident, there is little of interest for the agenda for today. Most of the time will be taken with private members bills and minor legislation.

Letters to The Editor

MORE ABOUT HELL

Editor Ontario Intelligencer

Will you kindly give me space in your valuable paper for a few remarks regarding a discourse by Mrs. Wishart, which appeared in March 13th issue of the Intelligencer, entitled "Reality of Hell is Told." I would like to say that I am glad that Mrs. Wishart would have us believe that hell is not a reality, but that it is merely a fire and brimstone. It is surprising that there are people who are still alive to that unreasonable unscriptural theory.

I wish to advise a few facts that no clergyman that knows his facts can attempt to refute.

There is just one word in the Old Testament translated hell and that is the Hebrew word sheol. It occurs 60 times. Thirty-one times it is translated hell, 31 times grave, and 3 times pit, which all have the same significance, meaning the world of the dead, or the unseen state. There are three different words used in the New Testament translated Hell. Hades, the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew sheol, occurs eleven times and is ten times translated hell which also means the unseen state of the dead. Greek word translated hell in the common version of the Bible which always means annihilation or utter destruction, meaning the eternal death in which there will be no resurrection. The third word Tartarus is translated hell in Tartarus. It occurs in 2 Peter 2:4, and means a reference to the angels that sinned. It means earth's atmosphere. None of these words mentioned hell bear any intimation of torment. Therefore, the hell of heaven was the fate of the wicked, why did Christ tell Peter to preach repentance on Acts? Would it be just cause to tell Adam that if he disobeyed he would be burned and then instead increase the penalty? Why did Christ not teach as Mrs. Wishart that the Bible promises a straight and narrow way that leads to life; that is, life in the highest form. Divine life in Heaven and also a broad road which leads to destruction, death. We are glad to read in the Bible of heaven, also called the high way, Isaiah 35: 8 and 62: 10, but nowhere do we find a real theoretical of sad come back from hell to tell us of the awful torments of hell. The Apostle Paul says: "He shunned not to declare all the counsel of God" and he made no mention of eternal torment but rather the opposite, see Romans 6: 23. Romans 6: 23.

Many times in the Bible where the world hell occurs, in the margin it is given as sepulchre, grave, in the verse it is given as the margin it is hell. For instance, Psalm 16: 10 in the first two sentences, one in the Old Testament and one in the New Testament in which swallowed Jonah must have had very unpleasant time with a hell the some people believe, inside of a fish. The other reference is in Revelations 20: 13. It is speaking of the resurrection. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it and death and hell (margin grave) delivered up the dead which were in them and they were judged, every man according to their works.

Thanking you in advance for the space, I am,

Yours respectfully,

D. R. STEWART,
Stirling, Ont.

Premier Minister Ramsay MacDonald said in an interview today. The British statesman made this statement before leaving with Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary for Paris, where they will urge Premier Daladier to make such concessions to France to approve the project.

Mr. MacDonald said that difficulties any details but said "our idea is to open the way for possibility of economic agreement not between two, three, four, five or six nations but by the whole continent of Europe."

FINAL ACTION IN BEER BILL

Mid Night to See Half Billion Economy Bill Pass

Washington, March 20—(AP)— Final action by nightfall on beer and economy legislation was in prospect today, with the United States Congress ready to put the Roosevelt farm relief programme on the road of enactment.

Senate and House were confident that Senate and House differences on the beer bill would quickly be adjusted quickly in conference. Both bills passed the Senate, the $500,000,000 economy measure to the President-elect by Vice President Garner's signature.

With the budget-balancing bills disposed of, the Senate was in position to take up the farm legislation as soon as approved by agriculture committee. That committee was ready to report the farm relief and representative Byrns, majority leader, predicted House passage of the Bill by Tuesday night.

However, a host of amendments were in the night which threatened to slow down the agricultural air programme. Some of these amendments would add new crops to those already included in the measure while others would curtail the broad powers invested in the secretary of agriculture.

Boasting under having to play a tie with the Trenton "Firemen" the Belleville seniors not only are out for revenge but is less tonight of practically eliminate last year's champions and present holders of the Dr. J. J. Robertson trophy. Although rumors of probable changes have been heard from the camp of the green and white nothing authentic as to the possibilities of any new players being injected into their line-up has been officially received up until noon today.

With the usual feeling which exists when these two teams take the ice the patrons have a rare treat in store for them, when the referee drops the green and white take to the ice with Bill Green as the official of the evening.

Defeat Blue Streas 5 to 4 in Ki-Y Juvenile Loop Game

Edgar Saleman's Q.V.S. "Grads" pulled up even with the league leading Red Wings in the juvenile group of the local Ki-Y League when they defeated the Blue Streaks by the score of 5 to 4 at the arena in their regular afternoon fixture. The win over the "Grads" now meet the Red Wings in a sudden death game for the group championship.

The "Grads" pulled ahead of the Streaks in the initial period and by the time the third frame had rolled around they had a lead of a two-goal margin which proved to be the margin of victory. The "Streaks" however staged a rally in the last period but failed to even with the "Grads" but when Pringle scored with but three minutes yet to play the issue was decided.

Mickie Sharpe and Bill Hardwick-son's two counters made the score 2 to 0 in the opening period. Then Stone scored the "Streaks" first tally in the second frame with Hardwick-son scoring for the visitors. Storms scored two and Sager bagged one for the Streaks in the third period but Pringle settled the issue with a solo effort in the dying moments.

SPORTS

By Jimmy Thompson

CURRENT SPORT

Knocks and Boosts

Considerable has been written by various sport writers in Canada and the United States in the allowing of professionals in one line of sport to indulge and in amateur sports with amateurs in another line. To more fully explain the fundamentals of the idea, and the idea now in execution in Western Canada, it openly means that a professional hockey player, such as "Toots" Hellyer may coach lacrosse, football and play amateur baseball with the Tecumseh, if he so desires, or Andy Williams, ex-National hurler, could play amateur hockey.

George McIlmoyle, sports editor of the Edmonton Journal, comes to the fore with an article, relative to the question, by stating that owing to the few actual participants in sport in Western Canada, this idea was necessary. In Alberta, Mr. McIlmoyle quite rightly points out that the population of the west does not warrant the carrying on of sports to the extensive degree, that it does in Ontario and Quebec. Strange as it may seem the Maritime provinces are faced with the west in this new idea and naturally have Ontario and Quebec as the butt of its old tradition, of "once a professional, always a professional." The west is open amateurs go so far as to state, that they will form a separate body from the east, and not affected to, Mr. McIlmoyle, in his article, places the idea before the public and western sport sounds "to put together an entirely unbiased body for settlement of sport throughout all Canada". The sport throughout the west would certainly be interesting, we'd agreed.

The sport members in Western Canada have practically the same idea in mind in view of the fact that where amateurs and professionals are concerned the same club would not lose their amateur status as long as the amateurs do not receive remuneration for their endeavors. It cannot be denied, that there have been cases where these proceedings smoothed over by the "under the table" route or "selling the take" as the saying sometimes goes.

At various intervals the amateur magnate are all against professionals and sundry are given out regarding the "cleaning up" of amateur sports throughout the country. These "house cleanings" usually die a slow but sure death and nothing is ever done about the matter. Perhaps Mr. McIlmoyle's suggestion of the mingling of amateurs and professionals would help clarify the air if it were put into practice.

With the exception of a couple of afternoons, Thursday and Saturday night of this week will see the termination of skating at the Belleville arena for the current season. Manager Jacobi announced this morning, that he has intended closing the rink for public skating next Saturday night. Of course the Arena will be operated during the remaining games of the Belleville and District League, which terminates around the first of April.

This week's schedule ends the games in the current section of the local post-season league. Regardless as to the results of this week's schedule Dan Lalbrah's Trenton "Imperials" have practically assured themselves of a play-off position already. The remaining three teams in competition will have a battle to out for the other top rungs in the ladder. Of course, the team that is going "it" may nearly scratched the surface, but we feel, that more than the usual amount of excitement will be taken in the intermediate group before the end of March, at present Madoc, Belleville and Frankford are set in first with Tweed playing their initial match tonight.

In group "A" we find the Trenton "Imperials" leading the pack with a win and a tie to their credit. Next in line comes the Campbellford "Boss" Curry outfit, with a game played and that registered on the victory side of the ledger. The local Belleville Cities Service are perched in third position, Madoc and not but a tie with Trenton, while the Quinte City boys have lost both of their games to date.

...Incidentally the Maroons and the bomb tangle in a group "A" fixture tonight. We understand, that "Buster" Whitten will take to the ice this evening in fill the position left vacant by the loss of Lloyd Pepperwhite. Whitten will make his likely showing and if he is a certain degree, will imagine. On the other hand, Whitten has been servant reason absent from activities to Pete Morgan's disappearance in a green and white uniform tonight. We have not seen out of sight way is second to the ability of these statements as Morgan likes to play hard and fast and he can need his services just at present. For the remainder of the local's repertory, they are all in tip-top condition and ready to go.

JACKSON NOW IN 2ND PLACE

Bill Cook Has Still Eight Point Margin Over "Busher"

(By the Canadian Press)

Bill Cook retained his eight-point margin at the top of the big seven when he scored twice over the week end and brought his New York National Hockey League goal-crop to 27—Eddie Shuttleworth helped and with his 22 assists brought his point total to 49.

Paul Haynes and Baldy Northcott of the Maroons held third place jointly with 40 points each and one point behind them, Hooley Smith, another teammate, held fifth place by the same margin over Aurel Joliat. Marty Barry held sixth in his position just within the at-set group with 37 points.

The standings:

JUNIORS NOT IN SAME CLASS

Tweed Seniors Easily Defeat Madoc Juniors

Tweed, March 20 (Special)—The second of the home and home games of the exhibition series between the Frankford intermediates of the senior division of Tweed and the junior team of Madoc was played at the local arena on Thursday night. The score of 7 to 2 in favor of Tweed gave them a decided edge in total goals scored in the two games. A fair crowd was on hand to witness what is probably the concluding game of the present season. The ice was fast and the players extended themselves throughout. The superior-ce of the local boys was more than the visitors could cope with though they did not give up. They were strengthened by Mr. Jones, Rashotte and Terry of Tweed who have been members of their junior team during the past winter. The first named secured both goals for the visitors. Bateson and West made a hasty debut on the local ice surface and several dangerous rushes, but could not break into the score column.

For Tweed R. Thompson in goal gave as pretty an exhibition of net practice as the local enthusiasts have seen this winter The visitors broke through on several occasions and with the Tweed goalie at their mercy either drove their rubber over or fed him nasty miraculous saves. G. Gerald and F. Gerald began their goals for the visitors. Bateson and West made a hasty debut on the local ice surface and several dangerous rushes, but could not break into the score column.

THE GRANULATED HARD-WATER SOAP

For Those Forty Days of Pre-Easter Fasting

Those forty days of pre-Easter fasting are with us again. And this is one time when the fates seem also to be with us. For the kitchen needs very fortunately fit right in with ideas of economy and thrifty meal-planning. With many costly items traditionally eliminated during this season, selected here are delicious meals. Such is the case when cauliflower is combined in a delicious way with cheese.

Cauliflower Au Casserole.

1 head cauliflower (boiled), 2 cooked carrots (diced), 1 cup peas (cooked or canned), 2 cups white sauce (medium), ½ lb. American cheese, 2 cups corn flakes.

Arrange carrots and peas around head of cauliflower in casserole dish. Cover with well seasoned white sauce Sprinkle with grated cheese and corn flake crumbs. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 30 minutes.

Peanut Butter Loaf.

1 cup peanut butter, 1 heaping cup corn meal, 1 cup cold water, 1 egg, 1¼ tbsps. corn starch, sage to taste, 1 teaspoon salt.

Mix thoroughly. Put into a well greased pan. Cook over steam for 1¼ hours in a moderate oven (350° F.).

A Mother Who Can't Say "No"

It Isn't The Unselfish Gesture She May Think It Is

By Constance Cameron

The mother sat at the front window and watched her young son throwing snowballs with two companions.

"He really shouldn't be out yet," she sighed, "but he saw the other boys and he begged to go out, and then he cried so pitifully I just couldn't say 'no' to him. I don't believe it will hurt him—just to be out for a few minutes—"

And the mother "couldn't say no" was identical with a million others all over the world at the moment. It wasn't because she felt that the child's desire for outdoor play was necessary or good for him just then; it wasn't because she is mainly unwilling to give him each thing he should have no matter what the cost to herself in sacrifice; it was because, with a million other perfectly human mothers, she'd reached the limit of her resistance and couldn't stand the child's teasing and begging and crying another minute. Like many other words, it wasn't to give pleasure to the child so much as it was to please herself.

. . . . . An old Alibi . . . . . ever worked one, this of not being able to say "no"? Even a child needs to hear a "no". It's usually used to spare her own feelings, not theirs. Yet we keep on kidding ourselves, sighing like martyrs expecting to be canonized into heaven for the eternal spirit of motherhood because we can't say "no."

Hooey! It's an alibi and a well recognized one at this writing.

"No" is so much harder (on us) than the child. It takes so much patience, and backbone and balance to continue to say "no" until the child really believes it, that we weaken and can't bear to say it any longer—because it is easier to let the child have his own way.

When you can't say "no" to the plea for prolonged bedtime, for the forbidden candy, for the many things you've decided aren't the right things for the child, you aren't an unselfish as you think you are. You're using an alibi for your own comfort, and nothing that alibi with the hypocritical sigh that is meant to say, "I'm just too kind-hearted, too fond of him." And I repeat, most of us use an alibi. Stop kidding yourself.

Beauty .... By Helen Jameson

Glamorous Girls? Who Are They And Why?

Have you noticed what a lot of clamoring is going on about glamor? The word is getting all worn out, and so are the people who have it pounding into their ears about it all the time. It seems that all the twinkling stars of our firmament have it. They weren't born with it. Some smart director made it for them told them how to get it.

And when we get down to brass tacks it doesn't seem to me we think it does. Says the dictionary, glamor is "magic, enchantment, spell, different from what they are; making objects appear more beautiful or dignified." It is evidently, putting the accent on the first syllable, something which, actually, isn't so much. It may also, the student of girlology can't help being interested, since this glamor stuff seems to have got a grip on the minds of some members of the sisterhood. If they could be soothed, bring handicapped maybe by a funny nature, a chin that's receding far enough, they cook up a strange witchery of their own and call it glamor.

They go about it by painting their eyelids heavily, acquiring a black sheepskin look in imitation of Garbo, doing up their hair queerly, you know. Fay-way, dreamy glances in deep pools, lounging over the end of a davenport in a scooped out attitude. We mustn't be too hard on them. They don't really know glamor. They're just trying, poor lambs, looking for it, hoping to catch it, make a pet of it, increase their chances for knocking out the male girl's eye. Oh, tooty-tooty! What a world!

Perhaps it is the pursuit of glamor that inspires a girl to do a bold bob!

Comparing Your Child to Another

If The Comparison is Unfavorable it May Cause Resentment

(By Constance Cameron)

We are all pretty apt to compare our progress, or lack of it, to something that some one else has done. And this, I think, is often cause for extreme discouragement. This method of comparing the work or behaviour of one child to that of another is the surest way of handicapping the child to forge ahead, and this, too, even in discouragement and resentment and sometimes, unfortunately, many times.

We are prone to be very easily satisfied as well as 'soon!" And we sigh. And Mary Jane told Mrs. Smith-Jones' new and pretty little sick sprout that Barbara's mother, a good little sneaky things to Joan. She told Mrs. Smith-Jones' sprout upon Joan. Not because she naturally dislikes her sister, but because her parents have compared her unfavorably with the other child. And, perhaps, they've said, too, that when Barbara was trying the hardest to improve her own state of work or behaviour.

It all boils down finally to the theory advanced by a good golfer who, when asked if playing with a professional golfer didn't flutter him, replied: "No, I'm not trying to beat him, I'm trying to improve my own game."

Praise Improvement.

When we feel the impulse to compare our Barbara with our Joana, it is well to be very sure that Barbara isn't going to be helped by comparing herself to Joan, and by comparing her state of mind with her acts of yesterday!

Don't try to spur Barbara: "You are as good as Joan today." Rather say: "You are very much better today than you did yesterday." Praise each child's every effort to work his yardstick. If he shows even a little improvement, he should be lipped. Don't say, "Joan got better marks than you did this month." Say, "Why, Barbara, you've got a third of the preceding month. Has she improved? Then she's doing the most important thing, even though that slight improvement brings her nowhere near the perfection of Joan or any other child.

We all must compete with ourselves, and we must follow! Compare your child with his former self, not another child. You can best help him that way.

AIKENS' W.M.S.

The World Day of Prayer and the regular monthly meeting of the W.M.S. of Aikens was the theme of Mrs. Wm. McMullen, Friday, March 10th, a good attendance. Owing to the absence of the President, Mrs. J. P. Grills, Mrs. H. Kellar presided over the business period and beautiful hymns. Hymn "Sweet Hour of Prayer" was sung followed by short prayers by Mrs. Bruce Grills, Mrs. Fred Grills and Mrs. W. Bush for China, Japan, India and Russia. The offertorial prayer was then brought this most delightful meeting to a close.

The regular monthly meeting of the W.M.S. opened by all repeating the Lord's Prayer, the devotional period was conducted by Mrs. A. Bruce Grills. Reading on Comfort was given by Mrs. Sarah Elmy. Minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Hymn "Savior like a Shepherd Lead Us" was sung. Rev. Mr. Sexsmith closed the meeting with prayer.

Ply Brush for Beautiful Hair

BY HELEN FOLLETT

Just what does the hairbrush do, in the way of preserving the vitamin halo? It whisks away dust that has gathered during the day, and that's a good deal. It puts oil on the high polish that makes hair shimmer. It removes those shafts that have outlived their time, are on the way to wherever heaven hairs go when they die, giving a chance to new tresses to come along. Keep the crop abundant. But brushing decrees the fresh laid marcel or water wave, and there's the rub. So do double time with the brush when the sunshiniest, gay silk, and the topcoat is ready for the shampoo. After the brushing, mind the scalp without mercy.

In childhood eyelashes are long and curly. They seem to love virtually as the years count up. Unless you're one of the lucky few, there's trouble ahead for their curling loveliness. Vaseline fills the need. Keep it on all the time. Give a light massage with it at bedtime, use it on the lid edges and it will determined after applying make up. It is the final touch. The effect is pleasing: glistening lids put star-shine in the eyes. Winkers lift'eye, grow thick and long.

Because the three-day liquid diet doesn't make facial tissues any firmer—firmness is the one of the most desirable and elusive factors of weight reducing. So no food we once swore by, then left off, should you dare take no more! And, except perhaps a nibble of cracker now and then, the diet is limited to broths, clear soups, clear broth, milk, buttermilk, fruit juices, lemonade (unsweetened) and grape juice. In addition a brisk oil rub in opposite directions from fifteen or twenty pounds better to see your self in front, though. Don't overdo it, there's a happy medium.

When using dental floss to dislodge particles of food that clings between the teeth, be careful not to saw into gums. Any wound is subject to infection, gums are particularly susceptible.

Children are Appreciative

BY CONSTANCE CAMERON

We hear so much about the ingratitude of children that I am always glad to relate incidents wherein a child shows that he is silently, if not always verbally, sensible of what is being done for him with the attendant sacrifices.

The mother's eye shone, as she looked off the vacuum cleaner and raked up straightly. "I've been awfully discouraged at times," she told me, "but I guess it's all worth while after all."

The mother glances by the side of the child's head and she sides that trudges to market twice a week because there's always can buy food a few cents cheaper there, and does corners, sometimes two and sometimes three blocks and clothed and in school. It was younger and hated her who had bought that high of her head behind eyes.

The Boy's Sacrifice

The boy had asked his grandmother to make a sled for Christmas and she had promised it to him. Then, about two weeks before the exciting day, he came to her and said gravely: Grandmother, have you bought my sled yet?" No, dear yet. "Well then, I guess maybe you'd better get me an express cart instead. I've been thinking I can only sleep on it for a week or two and then it's all over. But I'll have a cart, I can go to town for the groceries, I can buy presents for mother, and I can get her anything she wants. Then I can go back for her—and maybe I can make some money carting things in it for other folks, too."

All this out of a clear sky. All the more appreciated because the thing from a small boy whom the world has taught to look for favors and hard work for granted without thanks, and scarcely ever a word of praise long to help her for a few more years.

Yes, it is all worth while. All it is sweet and warming to the mother's heart, when her child asks for a little cart with which to help her "while then I'd sled" is his own exclusive pleasure.

SHARP DECLINE IN EGG PRICES

Decline is General Over The Whole of Canada

Ottawa, Mar. 20 (CP)—A general heavy decline in egg values took place over practically the whole of Canada during the week, according to a report issued today by the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Absence of Selling Pressure Enabled Price Structure to Hold

Toronto, March 20 (CP)—Buying was negligible in the Standard Mining Market this afternoon, but absence of selling pressure enabled the price structure to hold firm. Traders Resumed Extreme Caution And Mart Turned Dull

(By Canada A. Dayton, Associated Press, Financial Editor)

New York, March 20—Rail shares made a somewhat firm appearance to the stock market today, but trading was dull, reflecting extreme caution which has characterized their additional activity for the during recent months, and the list closed irregularly.

Washington remained the focal point of interest, with the market apparently stimulated by indications the new administration was working for early relief measures. Expected passage of the beer measure by congress this week was discounted, and the wet stocks were the only ones to show any strength.

Selected issues of the railroad list still to exercise some influence over the farm implement shares, which also displayed

Advances of around 2 points were registered by Union Pacific, Louisville and Nashville, Delaware and Hudson, and Erie, while trades were up about 1-2 to 1 point included Santa Fe, Baltimore and Ohio, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Kansas City Southern, Allied Chemical and General Motors.

A bursted hot water tank gave the owner of an uptown barber shop, Mr. Marshall, a shock, unlooked for shower bath, and immediately set new problems in store with a miniature flood, shortly after the plane was opened for business Monday morning. The tank burst just as the owner leaned over it to light the gas heater, drenching him thoroughly.

RENEWAL WILL BE SUSPENDED

Treaty Between Gt. Britain And Soviet in Dispute

London, March 20 (AP)—Negotiations looking to a commercial treaty between Great Britain and Soviet Russia have been suspended, the House of Commons was informed today.

"In the present circumstances," said Captain Anthony Eden, Parliamentary Secretary for Foreign Affairs, "negotiators for renewal of the treaty could not usefully proceed and have no useful purpose."

Eden's statement followed the recent brisk diplomatic exchanges in connection with the trial of six engineers, British subjects representing a British concern, in Moscow on charges of espionage.

The prisoners are charged with sabotage.

Government scientists say that sheep growers can figure what they sheep will yield in clean wool and density or fleece by this simple test: Clip a swath of wool four inches long one inch wide, from the side of the sheep, weigh the sample, dry clean it and weigh it again and the difference between the weight "before and after" indicates the percentage to be deducted in figuring the yield.

building tops as the switch was thrown sending the current through Sacgnetti's body. Zangara was officially pronounced dead at 2.27 a.m. twenty minutes after the electricity was applied.

The cadaver was taken to the death cell escorted by two guards. He was dressed in striped trousers and white shirt open at the neck. His feet were bare.

When Zangara saw the chair he stopped suddenly and glanced around at the approximately 20 witnesses grouped in the death chamber.

Turning to his guards Zangara said, "don't hold me, I no afraid of die."

The guards then released the assassin and Zangara walked unaided to the chair.

He looked over the death machine quickly and then grasped the arms. Superintendent L. F. Chapman and bowed him a sheaf of papers on which he had written: "Here is that book I have been writing."

Zangara handed the book on his fits which he said he had started after his arrest in Miami.

After handing Chapman the papers Zangara turned and looked around at the chair again.

"I no afraid of chair," he said. "I no afraid of nothing. I no."

With that he sat down in death chair and gave the attendants a lonely as attendants adjusted the straps on the victim of the Miami "Lousy capitalists," he shouted defiantly.

"No pictures, capitalists," he repeated. "All capitalists lousy bunch crooks."

Then he said "good bye. Adios to all the world. Goodbye."

Zangara Pronounced Dead.

U.S. FAITH IN OUR FUTURE

Belleville Merchant Shows How U.S. Seeks to Extend Trade Here

Has the United States manufacturer, commission merchant, exporter and engineer a personal faith in the future of Canada? Nothing could more strikingly illustrate the confidence placed in this country by those on the other side of the border than the statement made by Mr. Harold Newby, manager of the Walker Stores in this city.

Dated at New York, the communication received by Mr. Newby declared his unqualified belief in the merchandise from the exporting firm. In part, the letter stated:

"... as this particular moment business seems desirous of opening new accounts in the Dominion, feeling sure of great stability there in."

To prove the above statement, letters which were quoted on the line handled by the company were unusually interesting.

Again, in another paragraph, the following: "In addition to these we are willing to do business at our cost to pay our bills in the Bank of Montreal, thereby saving you the large difference in exchange at this time."

We have the utmost confidence in the future of the Dominion, and are willing to do business at no profit with you, at this time, relying on the future when you will become a better customer."

Other letters received have contained the above nature.

ANOTHER STUST TAKES TORONTO

"Depression Plant" Grows While You Look at it

Toronto, March 20 (CP)— The "depression" plant of New Kind of Trees that will grow while you look at it, has been added to the latest wonder of Toronto.

Grove word puzzles me their day; and sometimes, but the latter was as quickly dismissed by jibes and jeers. The "depression" plant, however, threatens to make the jibers eat their words. As soon as they prefer to name them, move over and share the limelight.

There have been reports of experiments which are springing up in which small trees are hung climber from the furnace, fertilized with ashes, and watered with soft coal sluding. But the real authority of the last word comes from Dr. Annette of the staff of the Physics department of the University of Toronto. Dr. Annette settles the subject by saying it is "nothing new," but if asked nicely will demonstrate it.

The reporter of the Globe gives the account of Dr. Annette's doings as follows: "She poured into a jar about a quarter of the ashes used for preserving eggs 'Then she added four times as much water and stirred 'Up the mixture. 'How stick,' said the physicis' She dropped in some coal and added the size of peas. In a few minutes they had reached the top of the jar, complete with leaves and flowers.

Dr. Annette's device proves the fastest," the scientist explained. She dropped into a piece of coal, put in some mushroom shot up. Ferric chloride formed a brown seaweed. Copper sulphate made a green fern, and cobalt chloride produce blue flowers. Silicate made network sprang up when manganese sulphate was dropped in.

Although the current rage, the depression plants have been known for more than three centuries. Ledoe, a French scientist made them in the Paris gardens presented to the French Academy in 1706. Chemistry books which is a partial explanation for the rise of soft coal industry is responsible for the effect. At the growing up of the "trees" there forms a kind of metallic silicate which when burst, releases more solution, forms a new skin, and the building goes on.

Bay of Quinte Masonic Lodge Celebrates 10th Anniversary

Many Notables in Craft From Belleville Attend Gathering

Friday night was a notable occasion in the annals of Bay of Quinte Lodge, the oldest Masonic body in Toronto, the tenth anniversary of the institution of which was duly and fittingly celebrated and a large assembly of members of the Craft gathered with the establishment of this unique fraternal endeavour were the present Worshipful Master of the event. Numbers of others attended the high positions in the Masonic fraternity also graced the occasion with their presence.

Past Master in Chair.

The regular officers of the Lodge relinquished their chairs for the night to a group of Past Masters who during the assembly filled the offices of Master during the lodge's period. Worshipful Master in the chair was Junior by V. Wor. Bro. George Alexander Kingston, who became a charter member of the Lodge when the institution took place ten years ago. The Senior Warden's chair was filled by V. Wor. Bro. W. H. Mason, K.C., who was Master of the Lodge during its second year.

2nd Degree Exemplified.

The Third Degree in Masonry was duly demonstrated by the following out of Past Masters, the candidate being Bro. Cryderman, a member of Warkworth. The candidate's father, Wor. Bro. Cryderman, took a prominent part in the ceremony.

The subsequent banquet was one of the most delightful episodes in the history of the Lodge. This was the 181st regular communication of the Lodge and many happy reminiscences were made. The membership of the Lodge has grown until it now numbers 350, all of whom are natives or former residents of the Bay of Quinte section by Ontario.

V. Wor. Bro. Kingston presided and toasts happily and appropriately under the formal toasts had been honored V. Wor. Bro. Mason responded to the toast to "The Bay of Quinte District" in an address of quiet quality and expressed the loyalty and devotion the speaker and all the others present felt for the Lodge. The response was by Rt. Wor. Bro J. O. Herity.

Two Candidates Reposed.

With the toast to "The Visitors" were associated those two magisterial masters of wit and repartee, Wor. Bros. Ponton and Mitts, the former being police magistrate of Toronto, the latter of Belleville. Chains of laughter greeted the humorous sallies of these well known and most genial orators who are both natives of the Bay of Quinte District and who, in this same toast, by V. Wor. Bro. T. E. Butler Toole, secretary-manager of the Bank of Montreal at Stirling, was a remarkable exhibition of Craft lore and humor, by a real Irishman who was happy in his association with a toast on the evening of St. Patrick's day.

Letters of regret were read by name of their inability to be present, from a number of brethren prominent in the Craft who had included message from Most Worshipful Brother R. J. Deacon, K.C., of Belleville and W. S. Herrington, K. C. of Napanee and from Bro. Allen Aylesworth. The letter from the last named is reproduced herewith.

The Senate,
Ottawa, Ontario,
March 15th, 1933

Mr. Geo. A. Kingston,
44 Victoria Street,
Toronto 2, Ontario.

Dear Brother and V. W. Sir:—

The summons for the next meeting of Bay of Quinte Lodge A. F. and A.M. and the kind letter you have sent me—have reminded me that on Friday evening—17th instant—the Lodge will celebrate, in a special Past Masters' Night, the completion of its first ten years of life.

I am very sorry that my absence from Toronto will prevent my being present that night to witness—if not to take any part in—the beautiful ceremonial which is announced, and to grace the great occasion.

But while not with you in the flesh I shall be with you in the spirit, and I would be glad if you would be so good as to convey to the Lodge for me my hearty congratulations upon its successful attending out of this first ten year cycle in its history.

During these years age and infirmities have made it impossible for me to attend meetings of the Lodge but I have always watched with much interest the progress of the Lodge, from year to year, and I have been specially gratified to find that during the year just closed the Lodge has maintained its good position notwithstanding the period of great economic difficulty through which the country, and the world at large, has been passing.

It was a great satisfaction and pleasure to me ten years ago to take part, as one of the Charter members of the Lodge, in the proceedings at the institution of the Lodge. I thought then, and I have always thought, the motto of the Lodge, Esto Fidelis, as its official seal, expressed in words most happily a principle which was the guiding star of our founders—to "build on the rock" and "set sweet flame" and to "keep alive, in the traditional form of a Masonic Lodge, the fire of loving remembrance for the history of Bay of Quinte District. As Members of this Bay of Quinte Lodge each of us can do his part in helping to preserve and to perpetuate the memory of the pioneers who were our Fathers, and of Quinte's ancient landmarks, and all its hallowed associations and traditions.

The Bay of Quinte District has always held a high place in the affections of its sons, and I am glad you still observe that when our Lodge was established in Toronto.

Many of the Craft continue to prosper our Lodge throughout—all the coming years and may it ever keep in mind the high ideals which actuated the Brethren when its doors brought it into being.

Sincerely and fraternally,
A. B. Aylesworth"

St. Patrick's Tea

A most successful St. Patrick's Tea was held in the home of Mrs. Robt. G. Weddell on Division street by the Local Council of Women. The dining room was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Oak flowers, in silver baskets and green candles and shamrocks in beauty. Those present were received by Miss Ethel Armstrong, the guests and Mrs. R. J. Bruce, the previous president. Tea was poured by Mrs. (Hon.) Jones, Mrs. (Rev.) F. Smith, Mrs. (Rev.) Brethen, Mrs. (Rev.) Flood, Mrs. T. McConville and Mrs. Fred Burrows presided at the tea urn. The candy table was in charge of Mrs. Lorne Foster and Mrs. G. and Miss Gertrude Master.

"Specials" Reappointed

A special evening after the "Imperials" landed home; the boys were treated to a fine feed by the manager, Mr. Geo. LaBrash. "Weiner" St. Denis enjoyed a one man banquet at Belleville, for his share. All the boys expressed regret of "Bill" Miller's misfortune of having his left shoulder broken and dislocated in an accident at the game. "Capt." Geo. Pilon promised the cup for display at LaBrash's the station this summer. There is also some talk of adding a couple more Belleffentes to the line-up for the next game. The boys are showing good spirit at present than they did all through the O.H.A. season so you better watch us from now on.

LUMBER CARGO HAS SHIFTED

Canadian Steamer Fighting Stormy Weather in Mid-Pacific

Seattle, March 20 (AP) — Listing badly because her lumber cargo had shifted, the Japanese freighter Canadian Seigneur fought stormy weather in mid-Pacific today with no less than one vessels standing by to give aid.

The Empress of Russia, racing to the scene in reply to the freighter's demands Yesterday to "hurry quickly," messaged it had reached the vessel's position later in the day, and last night reported it had sighted the stricken craft. The message, relayed through the St. Paul naval wireless station said:

"Canadian Seigneur sighted and is listing about 33 degrees due to cargo shifting. Think vessel disabled. Standing by awaiting arrival of Oregon Maru."

The Canadian Seigneur, which left Grays Harbor on March 9 with a crew of 45 men, all Japanese, was in position as at 24 N., 161.26 W., about 2,000 miles west of here and several hundred miles south of the Aleutian Islands.

It is of 5,197 gross tons, and 400 feet long.

3 MILLIONS VOTED NORTH

Two Million Reduction as Compared With Other Years

TORONTO March 20.—For the first time in many years a bill to give threshers liens on the grain they harvest by which they would obtain their money secure other considerations was given second reading in the Ontario Legislature last week. Support was expressed by the agricultural members, Lieut.-Col. Victoria North, and Austin Smith, Conservative, Dundas, and the latter having introduced a similar bill in 1931.

Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, could see no hardship to the farmer in the measure, while Premier George S. Henry concluded the opposition who also felt there was no particular advantage to the farmer.

Hon. William Finlayson Minister of Lands and Forests, introduced his measure for appropriation of $3,000,000 for unemployment relief, the amount being $2,000,000 less than in other years.

Representations

The Game and Fisheries Committee, which has been receiving from various sportsmen and hunting organizations in urging the return to use of dogs in hunting deer, the chief spokesman favoring the dogs being Sportsmen Ernest Hemingway, who contended the present law was unfair to those who have dogs and have veterans and others with physical disabilities who are unable to take the sport of deer hunting. Hunters who do not possess dogs must apply for a buck law with severe penalties for those who shoot does and fawns.

The report of the special committee appointed last year by the Legislature to inquire into the game situation was presented by Hon. Dr. H. Cecil Charles Minister of Game and Fisheries, Toronto, which, it was explained, was brought under a separate member of the Cabinet from the Minister of the Tourist and Publicity Bureau as allocated to the Department of Game and Fisheries. Under the Act be codified and extricated from inconsistencies, and that power be reserved to the Department to make regulations as the condition of game or fish in any district may require, including the power of lengthening or shortening trapping seasons. Co-operation with the Province of Quebec is urged in regard to prohibiting sale of wild game and partridge in the open market, more uniformity in the game laws of the two provinces and definite marketing of interprovincial boundary open waters of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Rivers. On the question of guides, the report asks departmental regulations, for standard of qualifications, and specialized work in which employment of guides shall be compulsory. For infractions of the laws on Crown game preserves, the report suggests increased penalties and imprisonment for repeating offenders. Also recommendations were made on the question of use of dogs in hunting deer.

Marketing Game.

The Bill to prohibit publication of electioneering matter, sponsored by Argue Martin, Con., West Hamilton, was given second reading and sent to the Legal Bills Committee, at the suggestion of Premier Henry, K.F., Singer, Con., St. Andrew's Toronto, who opposed the measure, in sounding a warning that catastrophe may spring from a single stirring up of hatreds, and that nothing was more likely to bring about disorder than sudden advertisement of prohibitions against things in a community. At the same time, the bill was opposed by Fred Heighington, Con., St. David, Toronto, who contended that while there may have been some unfortunate incidents, yet the legislature should not approve the principle of the bill. Mr. Heighington felt the spirit of British fair play would exist and wipe out such difficulties.

Second reading was given to the bill introduced by W. R. N. Sinclair, Liberal Opposition leader, which would abolish grand juries, the measure going to the Legal Bills Committee at the suggestion of Attorney-General W. H. Price, who believed there should be more study and opinion secured on the question. At the same time, Col. Price indicated that there may be legislation to abolish the function of coroner's inquests in certain criminal cases, where it is felt criminal proceedings would automatically follow without the coroner's inquest being held. Mr. Sinclair charged grand juries are a useless appendage to the criminal court system, while Col. Price admitted that their recommendations were not taken seriously and their functions now practically ceased to exist. The bill would be simplified, and any action taken by Ontario would be in conjunction with the Federal government.

Allegation Denied

E. J. Murphy Con., St. Patrick's Toronto, denied the allegation made by Gordon Waldron, K.C., that he (Mr. Murphy) had received a fee for introducing a bill to the legislature which would abolish the present Optometry Commission, and at the same time Mr. Murphy is appearing as counsel before the commission for optometrists. Mr. Murphy termed Mr. Waldron's imputations as "dastardly, vile, malicious and unfounded," and refused to withdraw from the House pending discussion on the charges. Premier Henry then observed that he was pleased to have Mr. Murphy make such a clean-cut denial of the charge, pointing out that the House has the dignity to maintain, and that nothing attached to the member in the incident.

Premier Henry also read to the House a message he sent to Governor James Rolph of California, expressing the sympathy of the Province and the Legislature in the loss of life and destruction caused by the recent earthquake.

Little Benny's Note Book

Me and pop was taking a walk before supper and pop says, pop says here's your chance to go in and see that little dog I told you about.

I'm not taking any more chances, thank you, pop said.

Pop says he's sick any dogs on general principals on account of having been bit by a few, and I said, Wyfred O, pop, cops on in and at least look at it, and pop says I'll look at it like him then at least nobody can say you was prejudiced without first seeing him and pop said, forme me the animal, but I warn you in advance that I'll not like it and I will like him, and if that's narrow minded of me I can't help it and man.

Me thinking, O, heresy. And we went in the store and pop and the white dog with spots was in there sitting on some straw in a box, and he sat there looking at us with his head on one side cute as anything pop saying is that it? Well where's all this grate difference between him and other dogs? He seems to have 4 legs and 4 moveable tail the same as any other dog I ever saw. Is he trained at all. Well I say, pop, gosh, dont you notice his expression? Look at his look? I said.

He's not looking through his ears by any chance is he? pop said, just then the dog jumped up and started in to lick pop's face and the dog man said. Well, now that's strange, I was beginning to think he'd taken a dislike to somebody.

"Really" pop said looking proud as anything and then another fellow man came in, saying, That's a cute little puppy you have there, I could do but start to like his hand too, the dog man saying Well he seems to have taken a fancy to you and it's one that tamed him.

No doubt, no doubt, well good evening, pop said, and he started to walk out the man saying, I'll give the puppy in the window so he can say good by to you

And me and pop went out, me saying, O, pop, look at him in the window and pop looking at him wagging his tail, and pop saying, I'll look at him ahead and mind my own business.

Proving he was weakening anyways.

EX-PRISONER, JUDGE MEET

Met in Court in Yorkton, Today Meet in Fish-shop

Saskatoon, March 20 (CP)—They had met before but under more formal circumstances. Yesterday they discussed such mundane things as Swiss cheese, sandwiches between one committer of stolen fish, and another of snappy Ronguefort.

But that is the present situation in which Mr. Justice Donald MacLean and Peter Petrovich found themselves here. They met in a local fish shop and delicatessen.

Far different were the surroundings last spring when the Doukhobor head, standing in the prisoner's dock at Yorkton, received a term of three years in the penitentiary from the learned judge for perjury, a sentence which later was cut in half by the appeal court.

However, judge and former prisoner at the bar have let bygones be bygones.

They fell to talking, through an interpreter, in the fish shop and discussed the merits and demerits of various types of cheese.

Which seems to have started friendship with a handshake. The learned judge departed with his salmon steaks and Mr. Petrovich managed to find some onions and cheese.

Simcoe, Ont., March 20 (CP) — Betty Fryer, 15-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Fryer, was last night burned to death at her home in Port Rowan, situated near Renfrew. Tied to a high chair and left alone for a short while in front of the kitchen stove, the child was enveloped in flames when her clothing caught fire from ignited and spread to Betty's clothing.

Washington, March 20 (AP) — Arrangements were made today for Norman H. Davis, special Ambassador on Disarmament and World Economics, to sail Thursday from New York for London where he will see leading British officials before going to Geneva.

SEEK JEWELS OF KING JOHN

Treasure Lost Over 700 Years Ago by King in "The Wash"

(By Thomas T. Champion.)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, March 20.—(CP)—Canadians may soon be forming treasure hunting parties in the Lincolnshire Coast, known as the Wash.

It is over 700 years since this monarch had his treasure. That he had the crown jewels with him, was travelling in the countryside, is testimony of itself of the liberality with which he held crown and treasure. The fact reasonably be inferred that he would have left them safely in the Tower of London.

Much of the area in which the King dropped his valuables 700 years ago has long since been reclaimed for small holdings, but the company, which has now been formed is stated to have signed agreements, which will enable them to pursue their investigations.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

"Permit me to tell you exactly what I discovered."

"Don't bother. Your discoveries!" Nora cried angrily. "I ought to have known better for good luck to come to you. You're going to have a row, and a constant cheer and comfort, and a quiet home and children, and you're a paper hanger and you have a paper hanger and you're going to have a paper hanger. I'm giving you everything and it's not enough. I'm a fool. I investigated that thing myself. I found out all about it. I'm sorry! Sorry—sorry—sorry! Now you can go to your paper hanging and I'll go to mine!"

"But, Nora, I—I should——"

"I wish one of those germs would carry you off. I'd accept the verdict gratefully."

"Nora, dear——"

"Don't you dare call me dear. You said the word yourself. You're not my dear. You're not anybody's dear. You're a—a——"

"I'm an idea it's all due to that infernal Chinaman——"

"Don't you talk about him," said Alanna.

"Why not? The fellow drew down his reward in secret. For a month he stayed as much under cover as the law allowed, and then——"

"Hello! What's this?" Nora reached forth her hand and lifted the telephone and called a number.

"What are you doing? Who are you calling?" demanded Jerrold.

"Sam Hall," said the girl.

"Sam Hall, indeed!" He moved as if to snatch the instrument, but Alanna's look arrested him. Her face grew widened, an expression leaped into her face that startled him and held the girl motionless. Of a sudden she had grown as white as chalk. "Sam Hall's number. You've called him before!"

She nodded. Jerrold is up when we come from Europe, and I've reason to believe he's been in touch with him ever since. I called him, but he was out of town.

"Then I'll call the girl."

"Jerrold, you mustn't."

Mrs. Timothy Eaton Dies at 91, Pneumonia Follows an Attack of Illness

Passes at Her Residence "Rayner" Early Saturday Night

WIFE OF FOUNDER

Store in Toronto Will be Closed All Day Tuesday

Toronto, Mar. 20—Mrs. Timothy Eaton, wife of the founder of the T. Eaton Company, Limited, who passed away in 1907, died at her country home, "Rayner," Oakville, at 8.30 Saturday evening. An illness which became serious last week suddenly developed into pneumonia, which caused her death.

Mrs. Eaton was 91 years, and almost to the end of her long life she had possessed a keen interest in everything, her interest in passing events, books and radio.

The funeral will be held from the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church on Tuesday at 2 o'clock, the service being conducted by Rev. Dr. Trevor Davies, assisted by Rev. Dr. Woodcock of Chalk Church, Deer Park.

The pallbearers will be: John David Eaton, Timothy Eaton, Harry Thomas Eaton, Neil Eaton, grandsons; and Colonel William Mahon, K.C., Harry Crerar and George Leidman.

The entire Eaton establishment in Toronto will be closed all day Tuesday.

Mrs. Eaton, whose maiden name was Margaret Wilson Beattie, was born in Ireland, her father, the late Joseph Beattie, having kept a general store in Eglinton, now Mount Pleasant Street. Her father later moved to Woodstock, where Mrs. Eaton received her education, giving much time to the study of music.

Was Married in 1868

While visiting in St. Marys, Miss Beattie met Mr. Eaton, and they were married within a year. The marriage took place in 1862. Mrs. Eaton's parents were living with their daughter and her skill was demonstrated in the winning of many prizes at the Old Boys' Dinner for the seven years they resided in the Eastern Provinces. Mrs. Eaton always actively interested in the business of her husband, who, aiding high value on her judgment, consulted her in every important matter. It was through her influence that Timothy Eaton finally decided to open a department for the sale of fancy goods, which was to develop so splendidly.

After the business became an incorporated company in 1891, she served as a director for some years, and retired only when Harry Mc-Gee, then her son-in-law, was named to the board on her recommendation. She was keenly interested in the details of the store, and was always the friend of the young Mrs. Eaton a sympathetic friend.

Gone Yearly to Europe

When the staff included hundreds of employees, she provided an annual entertainment. It was her custom which was responsible for the institution of quarter hours, and which encouraged her husband to pioneer the policy of early closing in the days when most generally remained open until late every evening.

Mrs. Eaton was fond of books and a great reader, her mind a storehouse of knowledge. Of a kindly nature she deeply interested in the drama and fond of music, and for many years directed a dramatic club which met weekly in her own home. This organization was the beginning of the Margaret Eaton School of Literature and Expression established in 1905. She was also a devotee of art and over a generous expanse of years gathered a notable collection, in addition to the Toronto Art Gallery in the form of a bust in marble of the famous Serbian sculptor, Ivan Mestrovic, entitled "Mother of Prayer".

Was Always Hospitable.

Hospitality was the keynote of her home, and Mrs. Eaton had tasteful and over the doorway of the Oakville home the words written by Henry Van Dyke:

"The hotel few enough to keep out pomp and pride,

The threshold high enough to turn drunk aside,

The door-knob strong enough from robbers to defend,

The door wide open at a touch to every friend."

Timothy Eaton died on Jan. 31, 1907. Mrs. Eaton devotedly interested herself in the philanthropic, charitable and patriotic activities in which her son, Sir John Eaton, was so well known. She co-operated with Sir John in the building of the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church, and the Sunpool Wing of the Toronto General Hospital. She was recognized for her generosity in donations to churches, hospitals and charitable institutions.

Descended by Navy League.

Mrs. Eaton's devoted service to the Navy League was recognized when on Oct. 13, 1927, she was decorated by that organization.

At the age of 79, thirteen years ago, she joyously accompanied her son, Sir John Eaton, in an aeroplane flight over the Muskoka Lakes. The flight on this trip was her granddaughter's husband, Colonel William Mahon, K.C., who remarked: "Mother," said Sir John after the flight, "I never was so proud of you as at this moment—seventy-eight, and a good sport." Beauty entering into all Sir John's philanthropic, charitable and patriotic activities, co-operating with him in the building of the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church and the Sunpool Wing of the General Hospital, gentle, merry and perpetual-ly young, she commanded the attention of all. Her donations to churches, hospitals and many charitable institutions had earned for her the gratitude of thousands. She was a regular attendant at church and assisted in a protracted investigation by the Board of Police Commissioners, has refracted all statements concerning her in affidavit and in evidence taken at Mimico Reformatory, it was learned on the week-end.

Written Into Records.

Toohey's letter of retraction was received by Mayor Stewart last Monday, and presented to the Board of Police Commissioners on Wednesday, when it was written into the records as virtually the last piece of important evidence pertaining to the charges launched by Frank Regan, local solicitor, acting as Toohey's counsel.

Adjourning on Wednesday, after receiving the letter and hearing oth-er evidence, the board decided to meet on Saturday morning to render a decision. Without giving a reason, Mayor Stewart and Judge Parker as a majority of the board directed Chief Constable Draper to assume the resignations of Inspector of Detectives Alf. Murray, Sergeant of Detectives L. H. Williams and Detective Sergeant James Thomson.

Declaring he wanted "to explain for a long time that he was now without counsel and that no officer of the force "framed" Dorland, nor was there money used for the purpose, Toohey in his letter to the Mayor called the board to decide the investigation. Toohey informed the Mayor that he had already written to Attorney-General Price in reference to his affidavit.

The Letter.

Toohey's letter of retraction is as follows:

"March 17, 1933.

"Mayor W. J. Stewart, City Hall, Toronto.

"Dear Sir: Last week I wrote the Attorney-General in reference to my affidavit in connection with the Dorland case, and wish this letter brought to the attention of the Board of Police Commissioners.

"I want to retract my affidavit, for the following reasons:

"First. It is untrue. No officer of the force framed Dorland, nor was there money used for the purpose, nor was Dorland framed. At the time of writing the affidavit I had just been sentenced to thirty-eight months imprisonment and I think I was feeling bitter toward the law.

"Just since entering the institution I have been given every opportunity to return, and have done a lot of thinking. Dorland planned the robbery and had every intention of robbing the bank, and if the police had not been notified he would have robbed one.

THATCHER COLT IN NEW MYSTERY PLAY AT THE CAPITOL

Thatcher Colt, that suave, outspoken, handsome New York gentleman-amateur who solves baffling murder mysteries in the popular Arabian Abbot books, comes at last to the screen in the person of Adolphe Menjou. His first appearance is in "The Night Club Lady," now at the Capitol Theatre.

The production is one of the most satisfying of the detective mystery dramas yet to come to the screen. It continues to get across all the accepted elements of suspense, mystery, horror and skilful detective work, and yet it does so in a subtle manner. In short, this is no stereotyped or formula detective picture.

Behind the sex detective is found a lot of murder to be unravelled with such a baffling crime as was the murder of Lois Cameron, night club lady.

She was warned in a note that she would die at midnight and Thatcher Colt and his detectives were guarding her closely at the time in her parlement. Just as the clock reached the hour Lois fell dead with a piece of ice in her head. A gaffe pronounced death due to a heart attack, but Colt was not fooled. He pursued his investigations with a mixture of a man dead for years as his only clew, until, by a final ingenious stroke of daring, he solved the crime and got a confession from the perpetrator.

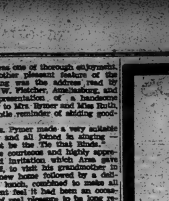
To Mrs. Pymer and Miss Ruth.

Dear Friends:

It was with thoughts of deep regret, that we learned of your intended departure from our midst, and ere you had removed from the surprise of that fact, we were convinced by a still greater one, to learn you had already gone.

Therefore that this event should not without recognition we have come to your new home tonight, unbidden perhaps, but because it is a custom, but rather with a sincere desire to express our genuine regret at your removal from Mountain View, realizing the loss this community, Sunday School and church have sustained.

The post has truly said, "Friendship is a Golden Chain that Binds the Heart Together" and when that friendship and association is of the good, kind and true type as yours and will ever abide.



Mountain View does not idle words, when we say, we are sorry to lose you, but we are glad you have gone to a home where you will fit, to the community and church services of whatever kind you attend again, and that you will both find splendid companionship in service, in this your new place of abode.

And just as a slight token of our love and esteem, we ask you to accept this gift, Let it speak to you as "a tie that binds" and a memento of our appreciation of your friendship.

May you both enjoy many years of health and happiness and usefulness.

Signed on behalf of the Church, Rev. W. G. Fletcher, on behalf of the Choir, Audrey Anderson; on behalf of the Sunday School, Esther Parliament, on behalf of the Neighborhood, Alfred Poste.

TOOHEY SAYS DORLAND WAS NOT FRAMED

Feeling Bitter Against the Law When Affadavit Was Taken

MAYBE PROBE

Decision in This Respect Rest With The Attorney General

Toronto, Mar. 20.—William Toohey whose charges alleging a police "frame-up" of Albert Dorland to rob the Royal Bank at Wellesley and Church streets three years ago resulted in a protracted investigation by the Board of Police Commissioners, has retracted all statements contained in his affidavit and in evidence taken at Mimico Reformatory, it was learned on the week-end.

Written Into Records.

Toohey's letter of retraction was received by Mayor Stewart last Monday, and presented to the Board of Police Commissioners on Wednesday, when it was written into the records as virtually the last piece of important evidence pertaining to the charges launched by Frank Regan, local solicitor, acting as Toohey's counsel.

CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORES and EATON GROCETERIA

THE 10:13 AND THE 4:25

THE 10:13 is distinctly feminine. Cars full of well-dressed, vivacious ladies. There is quiet but eager talk of babies and bridge—of parties and servants. But, more particularly of shirts and shoes, of rompers and rugs . . . Above all, of prices and values.

But watch the 4:25, when the ladies are homeward bound. Some are worn and weary—and quiet. Others are still vivacious and gay.

Had you trailed the tired ladies, as they were shopping, you doubtless would have seen them wandering from store to store, from counter to counter, asking, searching, pricing—hour after hour.

Had you followed the ladies who again are talking babies and bridge, dinners and parties—you would have seen them consulting lists—going directly to this store, to that department, to this counter, readily finding just what they wanted at the price they intended to pay.

Before leaving home they read the advertisements in their newspapers, made notes, clipped certain ads laid plans.

To save time and money and effort, shop at home first in the pages of this newspaper.

FEDERAL BUDGET SPEECH ANNOUNCES APPOINTMENT OF BANKING COMMISSION, CONVERSION LOAN; MINISTER FAVORS LOWER RATES OF INTEREST ON BANK DEPOSITS

Ottawa Athrill Over Budget Taxes Sugar and Luxury Tax is Forecast Relief for Farmer and British Buyer

Exemptions on Sales Tax Narrowed Down But No Rate Change

BUDGET PROBLEMS

Two Problems Face Minister of Finance at Present Moment

Ottawa, March 21 (CP) — Parliament Hill is all a-flutter today—it's Budget Day. This afternoon Finance Minister E. N. Rhodes will rise in the House of Commons, give a detailed statement of the nation's bank book, announce how he expects to meet the deficit for last year, forecast the financial outlook for the next year and proclaim new tariffs and taxes.

In many respects the budget may be one of the most important in years. The Finance Minister has been grappling with new methods to meet Sedn.-a deficit in the National Treasury for the first time since the general depressed financial and industrial conditions in the country. New taxes may be expected although it is hoped a doubting effort will be made to balance the budget, the administration probably will endeavor to relieve the business and trade thus instead by new revenues during the year.

New taxes will be aimed at those most able to bear the added burden. There will be changes in the income tax, but the sales tax is not expected to be increased although the list of exemptions may be narrowed.

There may be many add-taxes to the budget, although doubtless the revision of the Bank Act next year and to the impending World Economic Conference in London. The government placed considerable confidence in the outcome of the conference, especially as it affects currency and banking. The Bank Act revision was delayed a year because the Conference in the hope it might untangle International Banking and Currency difficulties. Today.

The new taxes and tariff changes will go into effect as soon as proclaimed by the Finance Minister in the House. Telegrams will be sent tonight to customs officers and collector in the country, setting forth the new rates with instructions to put them into effect on morrow morning.

As soon as the Finance Minister completes his speech, debate will be adjourned until Friday when Hon. J. L. Ralston, financial critic for the Liberals, will make his reply. The length of the budget debate will not be possible to forecast until the budget has been presented and the reply made.

Sales Tax Exemptions Lower

In connection with income taxes, forecasts have been made that the income exemptions would be lowered to $2,000 and single men to $1,000 and also the exemptions on dependents be further lowered. The usual impression is that the tax on higher incomes and on corporations will be further increased.

The impression here is that the minister will seek to boost the revenue of the country by increases in the excise taxes on various products such as sugar and luxuries and on dividends which benefit by exchange rates.

Adverse Exchange

Hopes have been expressed that the government would do something to relieve the farmer and dairy cattle, dairy products and the like to Britain and suffer from the adverse exchange rates and also to help the British manufacturers who have been hit by the preferential tariff duty to counteract exchange. It is thought that will meet some rejection in these requests.

JANITOR SEES SMOKE AND TWO UNCLAD MEN

London, Ont., Mar. 21 (CP)—The janitor of the United Church at Woodgreen received a shock today when he saw smoke coming from the church chimney when there was no fire in the furnace. He investigated a second shock when he found two undressed men in the church. Their clothes were found piled in the furnace to dry.

Wet and cold, they said they emerged from a well started fire. They were charged with vagrancy and brought 25 miles here for trial.

Government May Gamble on Upturn to Aid Budget

Likely No Attempt Will Be Made to Balance Books

CANADA'S BANKBOOK

Ottawa, March 21 (CP)—Canada's budget was laid before Parliament today. For the second time since he assumed the office of Finance Minister, Hon. E. N. Rhodes gave to the House and country his review of the financial position of Canada, an outline of the Dominion's status in world trade, and a statement of the methods whereby revenue will be raised during the next fiscal year.

Clearly and deliberately Mr. Rhodes made his statement. Outstanding among his announcements were:

(A) Canada's deficit on ordinary account for the year is $33,000,000.

(B) Ordinary revenues totalled $116,217,000, and ordinary expenditure, $149,217,000.

(C) Total additions to the debt of Canada both for ordinary and capital items and deficits on the Canadian National system amounted to $84,182,000.

(D) The net debt of the Dominion on March 31 next will approximate $3,532,000,000.

Mr. Rhodes made the high spots in the financial review, but the Minister's statement will be studied for its assurance, revenue, expenditure, and finally ways and means to meet several other important announcements.

The government proposes to float another conversion loan. It will be offered to the people of Canada, the Minister said, and will be on a basis that will keep faith with investors and will not in any sense involve repudiation of existing contracts. It is believed, he said, that the term can be made at a rate that will involve no financial saving to the public treasury." He did not say when the loan would be floated.

A Royal Commission on Banking will be appointed, he said, with reference to the organization and working of the banking system of Canada.

Reeve Wearies of "Boards Over Which Council Has No Control"

Windsor, Ont., Mar. 21 (CP)—Dissatisfied with "boards over which we have no control", Reeve L. Crowley resigned today from the board of the town council. His resignation was tabled by the council.

Particular criticism by Reeve Crowley was directed at welfare relief which is now 150 per cent paid from government sources. Special objection was taken to medical services for indigents as under the new ruling physicians are limited to $100 per month at the rate of $1 per call. Out of this the doctor must pay for drugs used, which was not fair to druggists, Reeve Crowley said.

"I gave certain promises which I honestly believed I could carry out," he said in explaining his letter of resignation. "However, I now realize that owing to powers given boards over which we have no control this cannot be done."

The medical problem was discussed at length and council passed a resolution to be forwarded to J. L. Ilsley, welfare director, Toronto, asking the limit be taken off and indigents might be permitted to call their own doctor.

Von Hindenburg's Baton Leads Salute to Imperial Family

Potsdam, Germany, March 21—(AP)—A new militant Germany, animated by the old Prussian military spirit, was symbolized in an impressive Reichstag opening ceremony today in the Garrison Church where President Von Hindenburg and Chancellor Adolf Hitler were the chief figures.

The Reichstag was meeting for the first time since the election of March 5. Other meetings-places were used because the Reichstag building was badly damaged in a fire a few days before the election.

The Bible of the former Kaiser Wilhelm II was left symbolically open at the Field Marshal's baton in the Crown Prince and other members of the Imperial Family.

Appeal Freedom Speaks.

The opening ceremony in the historic Garrison Church began with the tolling of 97-year old President Paul Von Hindenburg, the first he has been in public since his illness.

The elections of March 5 have shown a clear majority for the new Nazi-Nationalist coalition government, he said.

"Weighty and manifold duties await us," he declared, with emphasis particularly the milk price situation, the need for the completion of the Osterie Department of Agriculture and the hardship of the areas providing the Department is not satisfied with the present price of commodities at all times."

France, it was said in Government circles tonight, favors the plan favorably but wants clarification and modification.

They insist that the powers of the League of Nations and of frontiers are allowed.

The government was said to be more favourable to the plan than the Locarno pact, none of which think Signor Mussolini is trying to isolate France.

Premier Daladier and Mr. Paul-Boncour believe the plan from Premier Mussolini, "to calm war nervousness and that they therefore must accept if France is to be safeguarded.

"Courage" was the subject upon which the Rev. C. K. Nicoll, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Trenton, spoke to the members of the local Y's Men's Club at their weekly luncheon on Monday night.

Webster defines courage as 'absence of fear,' but I don't quite agree with such a definition", said the speaker. I am rather inclined to think that a better definition is fully being of the meaning of courage would be the recognition of fear, followed by its conquest," said Rev. Nicoll.

The speaker gave many personal experiences, relative to the subject of discussion, during the course of his remarks, stating how he was put in proving conclusively to the members that fear could be conquered, which, he later defined as being the greatest asset a young man could possess in facing the world today.

During the course of the evening, 3rd district song two delightful solos during which, he was ably accompanied by Jas. Clark, bagpipes, the Court Miller occupied the chair and called the meeting to order, before the luncheon hour.

SPRING HERE OFFICIALLY

Longer Hours of Daylight as Vernal Equinox Arrives

Spring, which has been lurking just around the corner for the past few days, arrived in Belleville officially, at 5.45 o'clock last evening, the equinox of the vernal coming. Today, Tuesday, is the first of the spring season, and while the old almanac, even though you would be received with sneers and jeers were it to predict that there would be no snow-bound Belleville citizens, who have been in the neighborhood of snow and scrapers on the walks for the past few days.

"To the average citizen the significance of spring is the fact that the day of Spring is not exactly the same length throughout the day on Tuesday, or the cold winds which blew the day before yesterday. Each day has been getting means long hours of daylight from now on.

Forty seven days ago a bewildered public found that it had got out of his hole in the district or Canada, and came out to stay, thereby precipitating the end of winter. Since then we have had a few flurries of freezing cold across the bay, blocking communication, but nothing more than was received all winter up to that date.

Today, Tuesday, a heavy snow still fall, followed by rain and then as force, "Sap snow." It was called, and it is the last heavy snow for it, not as kindly in effect.

However, Belleville's municipal fathers have some real cheering news. "Mayflowers are just around the corner," they say. In a day or so there won't be a flake of snow on the ground, the sun will be very bright and strong and summer will almost be here."

BUILDING OF A MOTOR CAR IS DESCRIBED

H. A. Brown, Vice Pres. of General Motors Speaker at Rotary

CANADA BUILT

Aim of All Car Makers is to Produce Ideal Car

If Belleville Motorists are not more motor-minded today than they were, when they woke up to another week's work Monday morning it is not the fault of the programme committee which confirmed for their edification and instruction a man who is a motor-minded Rotarian, an asset speaker for the regular Monday luncheon of the Rotary Club, H. A. Brown, Vice President and General Manager of General Motors, Mr. Brown was introduced by Bert Boyce, local representative of General Motors, who declared that his intention of putting over a "fast one" on his fellow Rotarians when had agreed that a general talk on the production of motor cars would be given, but when he found a possible, Notarians more motor-minded, J. Boyce, beautifully illustrated book in colors produced for General Motors for distribution in the Imperial Conference in Ottawa and also for general reference purposes in public libraries, entitled "Modern as a Builder of Motor Cars", was responsible for the delightful conversions of the visit and talk of Mr. Brown.

Anyone owning a Canadian built car, said Mr. Brown, for there are no better cars made anywhere. Although beautifully finished motor car making in Canada Mr. Brown went on to explain the technical process through which a car has to pass before it is completed for the buyer. The great proving grounds of General motors at Belleville, where all General Motors cars are tested in all degrees of temperature, from the heat of summer to the cold of winter, by mechanical and technical, by each department and all the various departments of modern motor car making.

The Ideal Car.

The aim of motor car makers, of course, is to produce the ideal car, the one which will more nearly meet the requirements of the average buyer in particulars. Mr. Brown went on to explain that technicians were working years ahead on the third design of a motor car, and ready in mind models of future cars, which if they appeared now would be laughed at and fail to find a purchaser.

In order to ascertain the feelings of motorists in regard to the ideal car, 175,000 questionnaires were sent out by General Motors to motor car owners, the replies received from owners were invited to "vote" for the question which they considered most important. Motor car owners of Canada, answering the questionnaire, declared their opinion of the public car, the perfect car as follows:

1. Dependability.
2. Operating Economy.
3. Safety.
4. Comfort, Convenience.
5. Ease of Control.
6. Smartness.
7. Low, Low List Price.
8. Appearance.
9. Pick-up.
10. Speed.

Eighty-seven Days Work.

Mr. Brown, analyzed the various points received, he declared in the ideal car, how far they had been met thus far and the steps being taken to provide them. Reverting to Canada-built motor car he emphasized on that every Canadian-built motor car provided one workingman employment for eighty-seven days.

An interesting portion of Mr. Brown's address was devoted to the car which will appear during the new editions, called "the Depression Buyer", an altogether different individual from the buyer of boom days—the buyer of today is deliberate, impervious to high pressure methods, does not have to "keep up with the Joneses", and buys just what he wants, when he wants it.

Great improvements are yet to come in the motor car industry, said Mr. Brown, as in the case of the development in automobile, steam railways and other sciences, the greatest development was made after the first twenty-five years, so it will be in motor car making in the optimistic view of the developments anticipating will be the photo-electric cell which will automatically dim the light of a car when coming in contact with a light, or on approaching car—the lights on both cars will dim automatically.

The three best investments of the present age are said to be The Home, Life Insurance, The Motor Car.

A very interesting description was given by Mr. Brown of the wonderful manufacturing plant, the research and technical departments of General Motors in determining all kind of things of value to the makers.

Rotary appreciation was expressed in his customary humorous way by Mackenzie Robertson.

Despite the rain yesterday the Salada Tea man kept his appointment every trip, one-dollar bill to housewives who were wise enough to buy a package of Salada Tea to show the money-giving man. Twelve women out of the city were visited and a number of houses called at. The Salada tea man who is making calls on the city is known by presents one dollar if they have a pound or half-pound package of Salada tea in their homes when he calls. WM. LIDDLE RE-ENGAGED

Directors of Country Club Prepares for Summer's Activities

At a meeting of the Directors of the Belleville Country Club, regarding business was transacted and plans formulated for the coming season. William Liddle who has been so successful as professional and coach is recognized as a splendid coach, has been re-engaged and will commence his duties early in the month. April 15th. A new steward has been engaged, who will be given references, and the dining room will be open for meals. Although fees were lowered last year, the membership was larger during that than ever before and finished up the year with a credit balance, and it was decided last night to again reduce the annual fees, and it is expected that the membership will be again increased. The fees for social and golfing members are purely nominal, and those for golfing members only are very low, the charges being charged elsewhere, for membership in a similar club. The entertainment committee had a most successful year in 1932 and turned over a handsome balance to their year's work. They intend to run off a number of dances and other entertainments and during the height of the season will run bi-weekly dances. The tennis courts will be put in shape early in the season and every encouragement given to youthful players, to become members of the club, and calculated with golf. The dock which was damaged by the ice, but it is hoped has suffered somewhat this year from the shifting of the ice, but repairs will be affected as soon as possible. The golf course is expected to also enjoy swimming and diving as before. Repairs to the golf course and equipment are on the way and it is expected that golf will be in full swing again in the next few weeks. Dr. Stobie an ardent golfer is President this year and H. M. Jones is Secretary-Treasurer.

Most mistaken people mean well, and all mistaken people mean good things.

ROAD OILING PUBLIC ISSUE

Public Works Chairman Discusses Question Before Public

To oil or not to oil is the question which is now agitating the city council this coming year.

And although that oiling is a decided success, and for the same reasons as has been done for years by the Belleville Waterworks Company, or whether the city itself will buy a machine for the work in question and do the work, if satisfactory with the department of public works and the city council seem decided within the next few weeks.

Sixteen miles of macadam-treated streets in this city present a problem for the department of public works, and the city as a whole. To build them roads, it has been pointed out by the city engineer, cost the city originally $2.50 a running foot for a road 24ft. wide. To maintain her road a good has been built, it has cost the city $1,000 a mile for repair. It is acknowledged by the department of public works that to keep a road in repair is to keep it from wearing out. This is best done by treating the surface to make it waterproof.

What Will Spark Down?

At present a feeling exists among the citizens that the cost of road oiling is one that should be bought for by the city at large. On streets corners, in offices and elsewhere the same feeling exists. The cost is a great for the amount of good that is received. That is the opinion of a number of citizens who have been interviewed.

All right," remarks the chairman of Public Works, Mr. William Ponton, K.C., "let the people decide to let the oiling matter drop. We won't do any this year. I represent the wish of the people in the matter.

"Then be sure, "what's going to happen to the roads if we let them go?"

Mr. Charles Mott, city engineer, also interviewed.

"Yes, we're perfectly agreeable to abide by the wish or the people. It will mean a big saving to the city if it. If they don't want it oiled, well and good, but they will have to maintain the roads."

Reports Vary.

Reports from some years ago that the feeling was felt by the citizens that the oiling of the roads was a good thing. Others that it was a waste of money. Others that it was a good thing, but that the cost was too great

CAR BREAKS THROUGH ICE CLAIMING SIX

Family Out For Pleasure Trip in Their Car

THIN ICE

Five Others Succumb to Effects of Carbon Monoxide

Brisk, Mar. 21.—Magnetawan River claimed six lives yesterday afternoon when an automobile, driven by A. Oliver Ambeau, broke through the ice, carrying the occupants to their death. The other victims were Mr. and Mrs. Louis Perino, and their three children, Olga, Edwin and the baby.

The party were apparently out for a pleasure trip, driving down the river, which flows into Georgian Bay. They were about eight miles from this village, and were just entering the bay, when the accident occurred.

Ice was about 1.36 pan., and so exactly was occasioned until about 7.30, when they had failed to return a hotelkeeper of the driver, with his cloths, got a dog team and followed the tracks of the car on the ice, to the entrance to the bay they came upon the evidence of the tragedy.

The two men brought the news back to this village and told Mr. and Mrs. Ambeau. The car was later got best broken to the three surviving children of the Perino family. They are all under 12 years of age.

At daylight today a party will start to the scene of the accident by dogteam in an effort to find the bodies. The ice is thin on the part of Georgian Bay where the accident happened, and travel by dog-team is deemed safest.

Five Die.

Vancouver, Mar. 21.—Carbon monoxide poisoning is believed to have taken the lives of five persons found dead Monday morning in a gasoline launch in the north arm of Burrard Inlet. The bodies were those of a man, a woman and three children.

The boat was found adrift by two loggers. The cabin door was closed tightly, and the bodies lay inside. The boat was towed to the Burnten power-house of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company and the bodies taken ashore.

The one meagre clue to identification of the party was a war medal, found near the bodies, bearing the name "Private W. Cross". Posters of the bodies indicated the family died while asleep.

Police are making a check of all camps and houses in the neighborhood, to discover if the family had been residing on the island. The island is an isolated spot, situated on the head of the north arm of Burrard Inlet, and frequented occasionally by logging parties.

A provincial police patrol boat on night set out for the Lake Buntzen plant, to which point the bodies were removed. Word of the tragedy reached Vancouver over private telephone lines of the company today.

Communistic Tendencies at University of Toronto Alleged

Premier Henry Said to Have Asked For Probe

Toronto, Mar. 21.—Alleged Communistic tendencies of certain under-graduate student bodies at the University of Toronto are reported to be under investigation at present by university authorities.

Premier Henry is said to have asked that the question be looked into as a result of a recent inter-university debate in London, where students are alleged to have boasted that Communism flourished openly on the "Toronto" campus; and that Communistic groups published a pamphlet of their own, and made organized efforts to convert other students 'to their line of thinking and action.

Dr. H. J. Cody, president of the university is said to be quietly conducting the inquiry. He likely will make some report to the government. Premier Henry would not discuss the situation yesterday, but when it was intimated to him that it was reported a student gathering last Saturday night had "mocked" Col. Mitchell's immortal "In Flanders Fields" tribute to the war dead, he remarked warmly:

"That sort of thing isn't going to be tolerated. It must stop."

Airing Needed, Claim.

In the opinion of unofficial Queen's Park—and for that matter, the representative portion of the Queen's Park administration—the reported "Socialistic - Communistic" situation at the University of Toronto is one which needs a thorough airing. Conservative members of the legislature are frank in their opinion that matters must be cleared up. Those of a purely political frame of mind have already voiced strenuous objection in the past to the attitude taken to the reported campaigning of certain members of the university professional staff on behalf of the Woodsworth-Macphail Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. Opposition has been advanced to the government by those objectors. It is said, that unless the offending professors curtail their campaigning activities the government should step in, and strike from the annual university budget, the amounts of salaries paid these men.

Officials of the Attorney-General's department said yesterday that the university situation was a matter primarily for the Education Department authorities to deal with.

Two years ago, it will be recalled, Progressive Leader Harry C. Nixon created a near sensation in the house when he demanded that the government suspend the university grant until such time as reports of organized shlatism at the university had been satisfactorily cleared up. On that occasion, both government and Liberal groups frowned severely upon the demand, and it got no further.

PROV. BUDGET ON THURSDAY

No Truth in Report That Hon E. A. Dunlop Will Resign

Toronto, Mar. 21 (CP)—For the first time this session the Ontario legislature meets on a debate day without any debate today, although it has a busy program before it. Fish and game and private bills committees are both meeting, and this afternoon Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney General, is expected to discuss his new mortgagors and mortgagees relief act when it comes up for second reading. In addition, the motion of E. J. Murphy, Conn., Toronto St. Patricks, seeking to have Gordon Waldron, K.C., brought before the bar of the house to retract or prove statements he had made concerning Mr. Murphy will likely be on the agenda. The house failed to reach the motion yesterday.

Definite intimation the budget would be presented Thursday was made by Premier Henry yesterday when he moved the house go into committee of supply and ways and means on that day. A $14,000,000 decrease in government estimates and no added taxation are expected to feature the financial statement.

Yellow Bill Moves Up.

W. E. N. Sinclair, house Liberal leader, moved his second reading of bill up another notch yesterday when the measure was given second reading and sent on to a committee which is now studying methods of revising voters' lists. Hon. Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Highways, suggested there should be some new method of bringing the voters out, several members thought it would be better to adopt a system of compulsory registration, and this too will be studied by the committee.

An "omnibus" bill sponsored by T. W. Julien, Ont., Centre Hamilton, received second reading, and was sent on to municipal committee. It provided chain stores should be subject to 75 percent of their assessed value if the stores are operated by a person who operates more than five of them in Ontario. Mr. Julien's bill also provides farmers' sisters with the right to vote at municipal elections. Farmers' daughters already have the right.

Reports swept through corridors again yesterday to the effect Hon. E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer, would resign because of ill health and Hon. Leopold Macaulay would take over the treasurership. But the reports were denied by Premier Henry, who told the Canadian Press "Mr. Dunlop is up around the house these days". The provincial treasurer has been ill for some time, and in his absence the budget will be presented by the Prime Minister.

REQUIEM

In the village graveyard of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Newtown, Pennsylvania, rests the late former executive of the Canadian National Railways. Here for all time in the churchyard of the place where he grew up will lie the mortal remains. This little cemetery is enclosed not with stone walls but with board picket fence.

It is strange—this desire to go back to the old home to rest in the native soil—as if man in his return to earth felt a kinship with the soil from which his body has been separated all through his earthly pilgrimage.

Gray once said:

"Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youthful, friendless and unknown child.
Fair science frowned not on his humble birth
And melancholy marked him for her own."

This does not describe the earthly journey of Sir Henry Thornton, but it does show the equality of death. Thornton, the railway executive, sleeps like others. "Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

Why this return to the old home of childhood? Despite the belief in man's freedom and his thought is to abide in the old place. It must be that childhood's impressions are the deepest and the last to leave, that they are really those which escort the dying across the border land.

Stevenson struck the same note in his requiem:

"Home is the sailor, home from the sea
And the hunter home from the hill."

The man who met kings and presidents, who managed the most modern of enterprises, in death is like other mortals, just as he would in life. He returns to his ancestors and old friends in the peace of that place where his first outlook on life was glimpsed.

Not long ago a great man was brought across an ocean to rest forever at Belleville in the quiet of the place where he first caught a vision of the great opportunities of life. From it Gilbert Parker went and to it Sir Gilbert returned.

THE APOSTLE OF PEACE

Men like Premier MacDonald who is doing the world's work for the opportunity to make the world safe from slaughter, lead all other men for moral heights, for nobility to which men can rise. Napoleon was an active man but he was busybirthing for power and wealth, he was using up the energy which nature had given him and developing those powers which might have been turned to better use. Man has a right to develop his talents but not as the little Corsican Corporal did. The way is the way of MacDonald who not for power nor wealth but for the good of his fellowmen has assumed a burden greater than any but a few could bear. His hurried trip to Geneva is an instance of the passion of this Scot and Britisher for peace.

MacDonald is an outstanding figure in a torn world, which is prepared to do unbelievably ever ready to do what it does not want to do, in its extremity of bewilderment, over the situation to which affairs have come. Premier Ramsay MacDonald is a sure and certain proof that man has a conscience and that he responds to one who would endure without the trumpet of public acclaim what he is doing. It is much easier to stir up strife and gain the hurrahs of millions who are ready to salute the frenzy of war. But MacDonald's work is the way of no brass bands, no slaughter. Those he encounters are not the class to be, but the peaceful, the accompaniments of his efforts are the prayers and wishes of men and women that earth be spared war.

It is the spirit in which the work of such men is done which counts. Unselfishness and devotion to the millions he does not know make him great. As against this peaceward movement, that of the war class seems hollowness, mere blatancy, and emptiness.

Men like MacDonald are not striving in vain for they are the finest expression of the race—they visualize what all men will some day see, and are already seeing—the utter folly of war, the folly of such protection and race, in armaments creating doubt and suspicion.

MacDonald realizes how dangerous is the element of fear in national life. Most wars are wars of fear, with the class in the saddle "playing up" that fear to the engulfing of all in rush of red blood.

This apostle of peace and arms reduction will go down in history as one of the greatest men the modern world has known.

The maid from the flat above knocked on the door of the flat below. "Missus says will you kindly lend her your gramophone, sir?" she asked the flatdweller who came to the door.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Does she want to dance at this time of night?"

"No, to sleep, sir," said the maid.

THE ANTIQUE SHOP

We cross the threshold to another world
Where all is dim and strange.
Withdrawn from vital contact of today,
It mocks at haste and change.

The ancient clock that wearily ticks on,
This faded chair and stool,
The andirons that once graced the hearth of home,
A mirror's placid pool . . .

All these have stored-up treasure to recall,
To muse and dream upon;
They hear past laughter and the echoed songs
Of singers long since gone.

A box from Florence ringed with precious stones,
A turquoise amulet;
Daguerreotypes whose faces no one knows,
A brooch of gold and jet.

By devious ways they come together, here
To rest awhile at last.
And all the shop is heavy with their dreams
Of many a secret past.

SIDELIGHT READER informs us that away back in the year 1800 newspaper advertisements couched in rhyme were very much in vogue and submits a clipping referring to the issue of the Ulster County Gazette of January 4, 1800, published in Kingston, New York State. This was shortly after the death of George Washington and the column rules on the inside pages of the paper were turned in tribute to the memory of the deceased president. A detailed account of the Washington funeral is given. Here is one of the "poetical" advertisements:

Luther Andrew and Company have this day
Been opening goods both fresh and gay.
He has received near every bind
That you in any store can find,
And as I purchase by the sale,
I am determined to retail,
For READY PAY a trifle lower,
Than ever have been made before.
I with my brethren mean to live;
But as for credit shall you not,
I would not live to rouse your passion,
For credit here if out of fashion.
My friends and buyers, one and all,
It will pay you well to call,
You may always find me by my sign,
A few rods from the house divine.

Other advs. in the paper were not so flowery, one man advertising, "one-half of a sawmill in full operation, a blacksmith and stout healthy, active negro wench." Another adv. gave notice that one Matys Van Steenbergh of Rochester, N.Y., was to pay more of his wife's bills, for he says: "Secund notice of my wife Hannah is hereby given, forbidding all persons whatever from harboring or keeping her, or from trusting her on my account, as I am determined to pay no debts of her contracting."

Then there are announcements of a sheriff's sales by writ of fieri facias, execution and of tesum fieri facias.

Another adv. is that of Isaac Thompson and John Tremper advertises that he has a general assortment of dry goods and groceries which he will dispose of very cheap for cash or produce only." An institution once common in municipalities of the United States, small and large is observed in this old paper, that advertising a list of letters uncalled for at the local post office.

Nowadays there is more push than poetry in newspaper advertising, a pungent prose, full of common sense and brief and to the point. The language of modern advertising is more expressive than any other style of language.

AGITATION IS ON to abolish Grand Juries in the interest of economy. The extravagant hand of economy is even stretching toward the law courts which, for so many years have been surrounded with all the dignity possible, and all of this compatable with a high sense of decorum, including uniform and sword for the sheriff, insisted upon by some High Court Judge. Some folk would like to have the courts opened with jazz and closed with ragtime. However, to get back to Grand Juries, don't forget that this ancient and honorable institution brings citizens to the county seat from the uttermost recesses of the judicial districts, permits them to see how courts of law are conducted, allows them to see the folks who occupy the Seats of the Mighty, also the interior of the Jail, the County Home, and the inside and works of all public institutions in the County Town. Surely this educational feature is worth something and should be considered when the Grand Jury system is being weighed in the balance.

BE MENTALLY BRAVE, NEVER PITY ONESELF

Self-Pity Sign of Weakness Which Must be Combatted

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Personality

Unfortunately we hear a lot about physical bravery, but seldom does mental bravery come in for its proper share of the plaudits.

Yet, in the last analysis, to stick it out despite adversity, to remain courageous, to fight one's way through setbacks, to refuse to let certain future, to smile when the heart aches—such displays of mental bravery—quiet carried on with without the fanfare of trumpets or the glare of the spotlight, are equally the if, indeed, not finer than going over the top into "No Man's Land."

No man, woman or child can go through life without setbacks; and life often has a way with one taking blow, but with several. Nevertheless, if he is a real man or, at the first impact and went down, what would become of us? What, indeed, would happen to the entire structure of civilization?

Although most people are mentally brave, there are altogether too many who allow themselves to succumb, camely, self-pity. And self-pity, of course, usually leads to a gradually undermining influence within the realms of human thinking.

For self-pity signifies not only an admission of defeat, but it saps the very fibres of one's personality. It stands for flight instead of fight; it often is synonymous with cowardice; it is cringing and begging; it insults self-respect. Resort to self-pity kills our initiative in try to begin again.

Every time an individual pities himself he shuts the door of hope. He figuratively spits in his own face and if he develops the habit of self-pity to any extent which is far from uncommon—he boils that same door and seals it tight.

Realize defeat, if you will, but never allow it to overwhelm you. Find out why you got the worst of it, learn from it, profit from it. Once that is done, it is relatively easy to prevent a similar calamity. And if you keep on trying and refuse to let go of life, your mental bravery is bound to bring you out on the top of it.

Should you, my reader, happen to be one of those who has fallen victim to self-pity, make up your mind at once to throw the habit on a quarter until you have routed it out and driven it far, far away.

Constantly watch your reactions to misfortune and disappointment; be on the alert for signs of weakness; watch feet and fight against self-pity making, and before they take a firm hold of you.

Counteract your timidity by reading heroic novels which will inspire you. Study the biographies of great men and note how they overcame terrific obstacles. Fortify yourself with stories of gigantic accomplishments. Allow your ambitions to soar! Build up a mental picture chart of yours to the stars! Make it a practice to fill your mind with inspiring thoughts!

Then, in order to do a real, good job against self-pity, back up the mental side by building a sound foundation of physical health. Go in for exercises in which large muscle groups participate. Indulge in competitive sports such as boxing, fencing and wrestling, and in races where the element of competition enters into excellent.

Everybody can make himself mentally brave, even if by nature he seems a bit timid. It is not what you that's the hardest; but once you do get fairly started, you develop with astonishing rapidity.

Arrangements have been made for a banquet and presentation to Robert Hall, M.P., P. for North Hastings, at Tancred, on the evening of the 26th, inst. A special train will leave Belleville on the day of the banquet to accommodate those from this city and district. Tickets are limited.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Frink, jr., Eagle Street celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding yesterday evening a number of their friends gathering at their home to honor the occasion and a very pleasant evening was spent by the guests.

Mr. Joseph P. Clarke left yesterday on a trip to Winnipeg and other places in the west.

Mr. Frank Bell, Dundas Street, last night led many persons to believe that a fire was in progress across the bay, when he started to burn the rubbish in his garden.

A young lad with wood became mired this morning on Asm Street just below Bridge Street. He pushed and pulled but could not get his rig out. Many citizens are complaining about the street car tracks on Dundas Street. They are quite prominently now that the mud has been scraped off.

A sharp wind wind, laden with the fresh promise of the north, whistled past downtown street corners early Saturday night On Pinnacle and Dundas the pedestrians were few and there throwing up in tiny cyclones the dust, the paper, the refuse, debris, to pass along leaving nothing but its bleakness and chill behind it. Here and there the fitful beams of light along the darkened streets flickered and went out.

But it was enough to light up the hurrying figure of a small boy who scobbed about as he hall walked, hall ran, with his head down, his head to the blast as he hurried along. And even the wind was not able to blow off the heavy scarf of yours to the stars! Make it a practice to fill your mind with inspiring thoughts!

Freddy Walters Up

By Louise P. Armstrong

The little nurse drew the letter from her uniform pocket and reread it thoughtfully. It was from young Dr. Ann Darrell, daughter of town hurriedly, and it concerned a mutual friend.

"Just before leaving" Dr. Banks wrote, "Freddy Walker dropped in to see me for a few minutes. Still out of work and awfully down on his luck, though on a high mash one to lose out completely. Funny thing, but I heard he had been keeping up Madge Darrell, daughter of your friendie old patient. Freddy's crazy, of course, but I think the girl may be likewise. I wonder if you'd . . ."

"A glass of water, please, Miss Wilmer."

"Yes, Mr. Darrell." Ann Wilmer quickly fetched the water and the sick man drank it, thanking her briefly. She watched him relish for his high cheek-bones under the mop of grey hair. "You're looking better sir," she observed gravely.

"Thanks to you, Nurse. Want to be out by Saturday. The race meet at Clover Hill . . . Dr. Simion is good and overworked. . . ."

"You're a horse running haven't you, sir?"

"Yes, a gelding. Ugly brute, El Diablo. Reminds me of Freddy Walker. Can't get anyone to ride him until young Freddy Walters . . ."

Her patient broke off abruptly as his daughter Madge entered the sick room. She was dressed for her morning ride. She brought a breath of outdoors in with her, and a pretty cheeks glowing, but a smoldering fire in her blue eyes made them look grey.

"Madge, you're not going to ride that brute, El Diablo, this morning?"

"Yes, I'm going. Ugly brute, El Diablo, because he's misunderstood. I get anyone to ride him until young Freddy Walters . . ."

Her father broke off abruptly as his daughter Madge entered the sick room. She was dressed for her morning ride. She brought a breath of outdoors in with her, and a pretty cheeks glowing, but a smoldering fire in her blue eyes made them look grey.

"Madge, you're not going to ride that brute, El Diablo, this morning?"

"Yes, I'm going. Ugly brute, El Diablo, because he's misunderstood. I get anyone to ride him until young Freddy Walters . . ."

"Freddy Walters!" Dr. Darrell interrupted. "Is he still as a stone, her face suddenly white. Finally she spoke, and her voice trembled unaccountably. "Is he going to ride El Diablo? How could you do such a thing, dad?"

At the challenge in her tone, her father's eyes flashed a warning to her own. "That silly engagement... still burning . . ."

"You never opposed my marrying Freddy before his firm went to the dogs. As for that silly engagement thing he possessed, you started meddling and matchmaking with engagement . . . I was a fool to listen to you! And now you ask him to ride El Diablo . . . Impossible!"

"I didn't ask him to ride, Madge. He volunteered. Said he'd like to. You'd stop this shabby, romantic pose and be more human."

Ann Wilmer, the nurse, saw that she was forgotten or ignored. In the clash of wills between these pampered people, father and daughter, she was a mere spectator. She remembered what young Dr. Banks had written: "Funny thing, but I heard he was keeping up Madge Darrell, daughter of your friendie old patient. He was smiling too! Looked from father to daughter patient. He was smiling too! Looked from father to daughter. "It's time for your medicine now, sir." She was thinking what a lot she'd have to write Jimmy Banks.

Madge's girl had been worth two pins she'd never have let him go like that, not because of the loss of his money. Why, the Darrells were rich people and could have afforded to be generous. What was the matter with wealthy people? She frowned indignantly.

"I was a fair day on the Darrell estate when the Darrells, father and daughter, were driving their ponies by the little nurse in white uniform and blue cape . . .

Ann Wilmer felt conspicuous and confused, until she observed the little girl on the box, the groom all around her, and realized that her self-consciousness was lost completely in the kaleidoscopic background of gentlemen riders in their colorful silks, the red-numbered blankets of prancing thoroughbreds being led to the paddock.

The bugle blew, jockeys on their mounts, cantered to the starting post, and the first race was on.

Ann Wilmer, nurse-governess, with Freddy Walters, gentleman rider! Very handsome, in his white riding breeches and high silk hat. His words of praise for the groom's chaps, gentleman up...ride the devil horse...

She turned and caught sight of her, exclaimed and thrust a gloved hand up through the bars. "Freddy Walters!"

"Why, Miss Wilmer!"

"Freddy, don't write me he'd seen you." Ann observed. "You spoke of going away...." He flushed and looked eyes.

"So you know my nurse, Walters!" remarked Mr. Darrell, in a very artful tartar of a girl, came along to keep an eye on me, and nevertheless, at the first sign of undue excitement, . . ."

"Freddy, you'll be careful!" It was Madge Darrell who spoke out impulsively, leaning across her father's knee to do so.

"I won't, dad, Madge. Remember that!"

"Freddy, don't ride El Diablo today! I ask you as a favor to me. Have the brute scratched...tell the judges..."

"You'll do nothing of the sort," her father commanded harshly. "Walters had promised, and he won't back out now."

"I'll ride him, sir, if it's the last thing I do!"

He was gone then. The crowd surging below the stand swallowed him up. Ann Wilmer looked down at Madge Darrell. Top curled. Madge Darrell stared at her haughtily, then paled and looked away.

The bugle blew for the next race. They were lining up. El Diablo, a big black horse, reared the groom with a groom swinging to his bit. Ann heard the crowd cried out in alarm....

"Freddy's only scratch him!" Madge Darrell's voice broke in a sob. The little nurse turned on her fiercely. "You're letting in for this with your precious pride. If he could be killed, you'd be glad, because he's not worth his faith, and now he's lost his money, too. You're responsible, I know, for he told a friend of mine that he'd finished...was going away He's riding to his death."

Again the bugle blew. The starter stepped in the line. And suddenly there was a terrible commotion in the grandstand. The aristocratic proud Madge Darrell sprang to her feet, gathered her skirts about her knees and leaped the railing.

Through pausing she pushed her way through the crowd to the judge's stand where the black devil horse stood, pawing the turf, snorting and rolling his eyes. Freddy Walters sat there sitting stiffly. He held in the excited animal. His face was flushed under with beads as the girl reached him, but his eyes were clear. "Freddy's stirrup, shouted up at him....Her voice was drowned in the uproar of the crowd. Someone pulled the girl out in time...They were off!

Dr. Darrell, pale purple with rage pelted at Ann in a terrifying manner. She stood back to avoid his blows, then tottering through the gaping throng to the enclosure.

"So El Diablo won the steeplechase, Father! You should have seen Freddy Walters ride!"

"Well, I knew he could do it," grudgingly admitted Dr. Darrell.

It was Madge who was responsible. "Freddy's only scratch him!"

"He's quite the hero of the Hunt Club," Madge broke in, her eyes shining, "and I'm so proud of my man's arm. "He's a son-in-law to be father's proud of!"

"What is Hades do you mean?" demanded Dr. Darrell, but his daughter's little nurse started up in alarm. "Your heart, sir!"

"Damn my heart! I marry me after the race," explained Freddy Walters, his face white. "Dad said he would give us . . ."

Dr. Darrell clapped his hand to his chest. "It's time for your medicine now, sir." She was thinking what a lot she'd have to write Jimmy Banks.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

THE CORRECT TOKEN

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Our college is having a graduation dinner dance and it has been suggested by one of the class to give favors and the suggestion was overruled.

I, however, want to give a favor (token) as I think more of the dance than just a simple dinner dance, and would like to remember it also. What I would like to know is what is the correct token for that occasion? My friend tells me that flowers are out of style and I don't disagree with him.

Please advise me, as it is first time I am taking my girl friend to this kind of affair.

K.

The most gallant gesture for you to make is to give to send "the girl" the most lovely corsage that you can find and have it in a flowlet one I think, for a girl than a charming corsage of three sprays of orchids, the loveliest one that you can find. Have the florist send the package without any card or, just the background of the sparkling sprays of the gardenias themselves. The three blossoms should be formed into a single group, so that it will be easy to wear either on the shoulder or at the waist. Have the florist send the corsage on the late afternoon of the day, with the flowers enclose your card, or write your name on the plain white card that the florist will supply you.

CORRECT FORM OF GREETING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me what is the correct form to use when acknowledging an introduction? My lady friend says that a man should say "Pleased to meet you" I think that he should merely say "How do you do". My friend is of the opinion that when two women are introduced to each should say, "How do you do".

S.

Everyone....man, woman, child ...should say, "How do you do" as an acknowledgement to an introduction. This is the conventional form for acknowledgement. You are correct. If we are sure that we have "met" a person it is correct for we may graciously add the name to the acknowledgment. "How do you do Mrs. ——"

But never, never, never should anyone say, "Pleased to meet you" as an acknowledgment of an introduction.

I think that your friend is confusing what is correct to say when she is saying good-bye to a woman to whom she has been introduced. Then it is pleasant and correct for him to say "Good-bye, Mrs. Allen. I am very glad to have met you", or "It has been such a pleasure to meet you".

D.

HOSTESS OF THE OCCASION

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if it is proper to be your own and your escort's ticket for any affair when belonging to a club or society and if so and afterward the young man generally takes you home, do you get the tickets and take the money for them?

D.

The girl, who is hostess should see has given the invitation, buys the two tickets. This does not mean that for gratitude the man should not suggest that he "reimburse" her and neither of them should object to he will make this suggestion. It be done make it a point to do it right lightly.....and neither should say any more about it. The man may say it as, "Oh, no, thank you. This is my party" or "I am very happy to have you as my guest".

WEDDING ATTIRE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am going to attend a church wedding very soon at nine in the morning will you please tell me what is the correct attire. The men will wear Tuxedo suits but I am uncertain what is proper for the lady to wear. My friend says a formal dress and another friend says a street length dress. Which is proper? Also what color?

Yes Quebec lives

For a wedding at this early hour, everyone should wear informal day clothes. Tuxedos are for informal evening wear. For a day wedding a cut away coat, or an ensemble, either to be of a dark shade. For a wedding at such an hour, there should be nothing of formality in the dress.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I'll spend Thanksgiving holidays in a city about fifty miles from here and while I was there the boy whom I have been going with for two years invited me to his home for a game of cards. His mother, whom I had met before, invited me to dinner and a party. When I returned home, I wrote her a thank-you note. And to my great surprise, she wrote me the sweetest letter; any girl would be proud to receive. I was simply stunned and so came to you for help. Should I write her again? I feel so utterly lost. In words, can you give me an idea how to start and also how should I finish a letter to her? Please don't mistake me, I was thrilled to receive the letter, and do so want to write her a nice letter too.

2. Will this paper do, or a single sheet with a decided edge?

3. I like your column and get so much good out of it each night,

S.

1. While it isn't really necessary for you to answer this letter it is very charming of you to answer it and I'd like to have you

REWARD

The Salada man may call on you. If he does — show him a pound or half pound packet of SALADA tea and receive a dollar.

GOOD MANNERS

How To Make an Introduction

To make an introduction correct- ly and gracefully is not difficult. But fortunately it is an art easily acquired, for there are few rules. Let us begin with the rules that apply to all introductions.

1. A man is introduced to a woman.

2. The woman's name is mentioned first.

3. The introduction, "Miss Allen, may I present Mr. Lee", although formal in style, is correct in form.

4. Mentioning the names only— "Miss Allen, Mr. Lee"—is informal.

And it is evident that you have started a very delightful friendship with this friendly and hospitable woman.

What I am sure that she would like to have you tell her is just what you told me.....that you were so happy when you received her note. I'm sure that she wrote so you: "I can't begin to tell you how happy I was to get your letter and your beautiful letter, with your sweet expressions of friendship. I was so proud to have made such a glorious impression, and I shall hasten to write better, most preciously, always. How you have been to me, with your thoughtful and lovely hospitality while I was in your home, and how you have wonderfully you so generously give me. I am a fortunate girl!"

2. I like better the conventional double-sheeted letter-paper that you used when you wrote to me. Your note is in fine form and very good looking. The one suggestion I would like to make is that you shouldn't crowd your pages so much.....especially when you have only two pages left over. I'm glad to see that you do not use abbreviations or figures in the address and your punctuation after the lines of the address on your envelope or in the heading of a letter. But put a period after Mrs.

INVITATION FORM

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I have recently become engaged and my fiancee's three sisters are arranging a bridge tea for me in honor as a large hotel. Here is my problem, is the following form correct for a formal tea.

The Misses Smith request the pleasure of your company at a formal tea on Saturday, the first of March at half-after three o'clock at Black Hotel

Miss Zelda Springer

Is the heading correct and should the world formal be used?

S.

The usual form of invitation for this kind of party is the use of the third-person.

Fashion Flashes

No matter how popular the severe unadorned suit may be, there are always admiring glances cast at the beautifully furred suit. A new suit is of bolsky green and has a rippling skirt and a three-quarter length coat being collared in silver fox, the same fur making spiral cuffs.

Your opinion of mannish suits would be swayed if you could wear a new model. It is a suit in black crepe and has satin faced revers and a satin stripe down each side of the skirt. Has a man's dress trousers. The Ascot scarf and waistcoat bodice are in white satin.

Just the thing to use one thousand of information- ings is a dinner frock of black chiffon velvet. The bodice and sleeves in white organdie petals. The self- tail is fastened with a rhinestone studded large hook and eye.

Jump into the new frock for it is always flattering and fashionable. A very lovely dinner dress is fashioned of bands of net in beige and in cocoa brown. The net is applied in bands to suggest chevrons. There is a high neckline with a pointed back.

THE BEAUTY BOX

Opening fine nails, by any large, bare and dirty from the dear ones gather, it is sad to relate that the brilliant nail polish is sometimes resorted to as a substitute for nail hygiene. If there's time to remove the carnation polish over, there's also time to scrape off chaps of cuticle, and the orange wood stick under the nail saves chaps the nails gracefully. After soaking the hands, push back the cuticle at the nail bases with the orange stick. Then, with cotton, the cuticle cream which will keep flesh from hardening, breaking, producing hangnails.

Girls of high social age need nine hours of sleep, if even 12 are to sparkle, complexion to retain the freshness of youth. It is during sleep that the body makes repairs, generates energy for the next day's activities. Late hours are bound to show.

Pouches under the eyes are sometimes inherited, mean nothing. Again they may be due to lack of fresh air, not sufficient sleep, nervous excitement, intestinal disturbances. Follow rules of hygiene, keep to a balanced diet, daily exercise, water drinking; every woman knows about them. Local treatments consist of massaging with hot water, then with cold, placing over the eyes pads of gauze which have been wrung out of ice cold witch hazel.

When eyes are close set, a girl is justified in extending the length of the eyebrows by the use of the pencilling. When she plucks the brows, it is advisable to work from the under side rather than the upper. Some of the newer designs seen nowadays are pretty pretties, but it is likely that they are an improvement on the natural brow weeded at all. At any rate, they give the face an appearance of neatness and attention.

It's amazing how many middle age philosophically, but there's no need of exaggerating birthdays, and that's what it amounts to when she lets her figure get bulky, or takes on an outward rigidity. A brisk, long walk every day will do a lot to keep a woman looking like should pull back her hips and pull up her head, swing arms easily, go boofing.

FRIENDS

The thought often comes to you, that you are practically friendless. Yet wherever friends, or how few or few you could call upon in a crisis. Who is to blame? Is not yourself? You are not satisfied with your friends from those who would accept you as that basis.

But you are attracted to those who do not care for you particularly. Persons feel not the slightest interest in you, but you move along the fringes hoping to get in with them somehow.

As a result you have few friends. And do you deserve any more friends than you have?

Socially, financially or intellectually, you have nothing to boast about you that would make you welcome in the circle where you'd like to mingle.

Naturally they rebuff you—at least they do not encourage you.

In fact, treat you as if you treat those you don't care for.

And, very likely, you will not outshine those you don't want as friends.

You are trying to overstep the boundaries that separate you from that you consider a higher rival friend, and you can't make the grade.

If you want friends - you must want those who want you, or go without.

"THE LITTLE GUY"

By Richard Hill Wilkinson

"The Little Guy" rode through the gate of the 30 ranch. He was astride a coal black horse, a horse that anyone of the Bar 30 boys would have given his right arm to own. The horse seemed almost human, so well did he understand his master. He was incredibly because of the size of the animal.

Jack Morkin dubbed him "The Little Guy," and then laughed himself to his usual quiet appreciation. The rest of us laughed, too, but kept far more respect for the little guy. The little guy's master was a person to be feared.

Jack was lanky. Or as least he thought he was. He was hoked up the rustlers' trail, followed it to the river bank and lost it again. Two of the boys rode upstream and Jack and a third rode down. By the time the search party had combed over the dry and rocky bottom of a tributary into the hills beyond.

For some unknown reason, perhaps the chief's orders, the guard had been doubled. Jack and Phil Lark and herded them into the Bar 30 corral. Then the real search began, lower some pity for young Phil Lark, and he rode on down the river. This time he had discovered their hide-out. Jack could never do to be taken alive.

To this surmise Alf couldn't have been more correct. The rustler-leader surveyed the prisoners soberly, consulted with the members of his henchmen, and prepared for the execution. Phil Lark thought the whole body of the gang was ordered back to the hide-out and that was the possibility that Alf hadn't come prepared. He would never do to be taken alive.

Alf and Phil, bound securely, were thrown into the corral with three of the rustlers. One of the rustlers, a big, powerful man, dry drew his gun and shoot them in cold.

In the brief period while the rustlers drew lots to see which should have the honor of executing the prisoners, Alf and Phil thought of many things, as one will do when close to death. Among the things Phil thought of was Jack Curtis and wondered just how the famous gunman would cope with the present situation.

It was at this moment that the gunman raised a man stepped inside. At first Alf didn't recognize the newcomer. Then he saw the slim figure of the man the two big guns and the great white sombrero. It was Jack Curtis in a buckskin jacket with bops, bops that clung to his slender limbs. Alf knew the chances against the three desperadoes.

"Hello," said The Little Guy. And he hooked his thumbs in his belt and stood there with a smile on each of the three rustlers. "You birds are playing with dynamite," he remarked coolly. "Cause I'm gonna have some fun in a minute."

The rustlers couldn't have been more surprised. They stared and gulped and if unable to comprehend. But then as The Little Guy drew his guns they understood. One of them swore, and his hand dove hipward. The other followed, then that danger was near and did likewise.

All still swears he never saw The Little Guy make a move. Yet suddenly there were two guns in either hand, belching smoke and flame. The rustlers looked stupefied as they saw the three rustlers lying there quite dead.

The Little Guy smiled a little, nimbly.

It was a week later that the news was made. Marvel heard. More than two hundred heads were superficially scalped in the Bar 30 range during a single night. Alf and Phil disappeared. Jack Curtis, the man who knew how to handle a gun and weren't forced to the hypothesis that he had in pursuit. All was desperate. He wanted to hold onto his job, and he didn't like the idea of the Old Man importing a gold gunman the first place.

Jack Curtis, The Little Guy, whatever he was, followed it to the river bank and lost it again. Two of the boys rode upstream and Jack and a third rode down. By the time the search party had combed over the dry and rocky bottom of a tributary into the hills beyond.

Little Benny's Note Book

His fellows was having a catch as the front street yesterday. Shorty Perry made a hit and it accidently hit against the lam post and took a terrible bop in the mouth. The grating of Mrs. Secor's order window and then, rushed over to the scene. The worst caller it could of went down from the room of Mrs. Secor being a foame crank.

Good mix that's a heck of a note, I suppose if that'd leave us get it? said Hazel.

I kind going to be the one to ask her, good nite she dont even want anybody to play in front of her house, much less give balls back, I said.

And none of the other fellows didn't feel like rubbing the ball and asking her, and then Perney Werner came up, and Pods Sanders said, Say Perney, you is a farmer, will you? Our ball stuck down. Mrs. Secor is mad and if you dare the ball and sat her to leave you go down and get it why then you can set in the catch with us and we'll throw it to you when we're at us to throw it to anybody else, went we, follow? he said.

Perney Werner said, and Perney said, No sir, not Mrs. Secor, no sir.

So about Perney, she dont know you very good and you dont need to even say anything about a ball, you can tell her you came to examine the gas meter, I said, and Perney said, Like fun, she'll know darn well I'm not big enough for a gas meter.

Well then say you're his assistant, Hazel said, and Perney said, Gee Chos said.

Perney not trying that idear either, and Pods Simkins said, Then say you're a midget, I am looking for him.

Shorty say he's not there, Perney said. And I said, Tim make her prove it and start to cry and say he's there in a box and then she have you by down the roller and see if your there in a box.

Perney not keeping on shaking his head, so I said, Your ball has came out through the cellar window again and I'm going down to see who threw it and who was it and a whitewash was working down the cellar.

Belgee's good thing on account of Perney is a cop's cousin's of all it and Mrs. Secor provetty wouldn't of bleeved him even if he had so.

CARD CASE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Will you please advise me about the kind of card case something simple and not very expensive—to buy for a girl of sixty? Would it be proper to have her initials in the design on it, or is that too ornate? Should it be of leather, silver, or so forth?

2. Also please advise me—I know that I should not have my cards engraved "Mrs. Fred Yeast," as I hate the middle name, which is Ann. Would it be all right to have "Mrs. Fred Yeast," as that is the way my friends address me? In addressing envelopes, should I use his full name.

Thanking you in advance for your answers to these questions, and for your column which has proved a big help to me.

Reader.

1. A card case of soft black pebbled calf, with gilt initials, is always a charming kind of card case, and appropriate for a woman of sixty. The initials may be in the design or inside, in small gilt letters. This is better than the latter, as it is less fussy, I think, since its a quicker means of identification at a glance.

Another lovely kind of card case is a black moire silk one. This is soft and takes up very little room in the purse.

2. By all means omit the middle names of you don't like it. "Your husband" will surely have no objections to your doing this since the card is social. People nowadays just throw away the middle names if they don't care for them . . . and it is better than to use initials on visiting cards.

Is the "Fred" an abreviation? If so it would be better, far better to use the full name.

And thank you, deeply, for your kind words.

DANCE EXPENSES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Our club is having a private dance in the form of a week-end at a local hotel. The girls are buying the tickets, which include the dinner charge. However, our problem is: Do we or do we not pay the hotel bill and tip the waiters? Or is that part up to our escorts? We are exceedingly puzzled and would appreciate your help.

Wavering Emma

The committee planning the dance should attend to everything. The price of the tickets include the supper—cost as well as the cover charge. It is an awkward plan to leave this matter; charge for the guests to pay. Each girl should then buy her own tickets, one for herself and one for the partner whom she is inviting.

CORRECT SIGNATURE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband is dead and I am wondering if it would still use the name of Mrs. Ray H. Downs, or should I use the name of Louise Downs. Which is the proper name, or should I use the name of Louise Downs. Which is the proper name, or should I use the name of Louise Downs.

As a widow you should use exactly the same form of name that you used when your husband was living. You are known by the name visiting-cards (black-bordered visiting cards, are not much used now), and you sign your name to letters in precisely the same way.

Thus, for instance, should be the form of your signature to your letter to me (or for an other kind of letter where the reader is to be informed of your formal name):—

Your sincerely, or (Yours very truly, for a business letter),

(Mrs. Ray Evans Downs)

Louise North Downs

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A young man and I are vocal students in the same studio. It so happens that we have both learned the same opera and we would like to sing our parts together for our own pleasure. Is it proper for me—the young man, who lives with his family, has asked me to come up to his home to sing, as one of his friends will play for us. A says it would not be proper for me to do this. It says it is. Who is correct?

K.

If you are sure that this plan will be agreeable to everyone concerned (especially to the parent of the young man's family), I see no reason why you shouldn't do this. And even if you sometimes go to the young man's home to sing wouldn't it be pleasant too for you to return this hospitality and courtesy by inviting him and the accompanist to come to your home some times?

Beauty . . . . By Helen Jameson

Dust Filled Po res Bring Acne

Blackheads are bad enough, but rubbed into the skin, rubbed in lightly, those sluggish circulation usually present when the epidermis is unsightly with black dots and budding pustules, cold water is helpful. It should be applied in the morning, and again in the evening with hand.

It is a mistake to open incipient pimples. They should be allowed to develop to such a point that touching with a small cotton swab will break the thin film of skin, permitting the pus to pour out. Powder with the skin will empty the sac. These small swabs can be bought at any drug store; they are used for cleaning the ears and noses of babies. Or the victim of these blemishes can cover her fingers with gauze, exert gentle pressure.

Two factors invite blackheads and acne, first, a skin that is subjected to atmospheric dust which has not been kept scrupulously clean; second, a diet containing too much sweet and starchy foods. Water drinking is recommended. Unsaturated fat is not a soft cloth that has been dipped in rubbing alcohol. This treatment is a form of dry cleaning; and the alcohol fumes suggest that bacteria are cleansed.

Emotions Etch Tell-Tale Lines

So the Beauty Quester Should Indulge Only Pleasant Thoughts

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

Faces are ever in the making. Cheerfulness, humour, good nature have a good effect upon the skin because these pleasant qualities make for health and vitality. Anger, jealousy, peevishness, envy are destructive forces. They spoil the skin, retard digestion, change the tempo of heart beat, interfere with assimilation and restful sleep. Women who stay angry are those who develop a wholesome viewpoint, bear with human beings, try to get through life with the least possible amount of fighting and friction. No woman can be beautiful who lives in unpleasant emotions. She pays dearly.

A face 321 is a success or a flasco according to the effect of the succession. Emotions are made back of the face. Thus the forehead, fibres and loose tissues are drawn in, surplus flesh nipped off, the wound healed from within. Then the inner vitality, have taken on a heavy sag, the cheeks have dropped in five or six years. It is expensive, excessively work, while cruel emotions are bad enough to affect the nerves.

Wrinkles at the sides and back of the hairline are also and charming, but they are a bother to the busy woman. Every time she has a howling wolves from the door. She can remove the nascent wrinkle, and waved to the very edge at the back with a dash of brush or two of wave. The coiffure with the smooth crown is still modish; there are times when it is a case look older when top hair is waved.

Gray hair needs fastidious care. It soap imparts a yellow cast, and white of eggs. Six or seven are necessary every time it is shown. Beat slightly, add a tablespoon of cold water. Rinse thoroughly first in part of the eggs, rinse, repeat the egg application with a final rinsing of cold water. Then spray. Add a drop of bluing to a quart of water, dip in the hair the final rite for the silvered ladies.

Children Afraid of The Dark

Too Often This Fear Follows Unwise Punishment

(By Constance Cameron)

A mother informs us that her seven-year-old daughter cries every night when bedtime comes, is terrified at being left alone in the dark, and the mother cannot understand the cause.

There are many causes for a repentance about going to bed, but the mother explained it in this instance just a few second after she had acknowledged the situation.

A few months ago, the child had been rude to her father who was too busy to read the story she had requested. Kindly, he explained that he would go it at some other time. But the little girl not-so-a tired little girl, and she stormed and cried.

Mother stepped in at this moment and decided to punish her father enough, said mother: "Because you've acted so selfishly and rude to your father you'll go to bed immediately—in the dark. All by yourself. Now you'll see!

Sent to Bed —In the Dark!

Now her good nature had never been presented to the child before as anything but kind and normal. At her mother's look they became suddenly a frightened stranger with unknown possibilities of danger. The child screamed and had to be carried to bed by force. Once there, she continued her screams and finally dropped into a prolonged sobbing. The mother, thinking that the matter had ended in punishment, ignored the child and let her cry it out. Three nights in a row it cost whenever she is put to bed. She has developed a real fear of going to bed in the dark. And without doubt she is.

It is also a mistake to involve normal acts, and usually acts which have no bearing on the misdemeanor, in punishment of a child. If the mother had decreed that the child should have no more stories read to her for a week, had denied her the use or her books until she realized how rude and unreasonable she had been, the good night have come from it. But, as it is, neither problem is solved. In fact, the original one is unsolved and a new and serious one has been added.

Don't use the act of going to bed as a punishment, unless you want to court trouble. Don't use the dark as a threat. It is dangerous ground. It isn't fair to the child and it surely isn't intelligent on the part of the parent who does so.

Once Overs

SCOWLING PARENTS

Why is it that many husband and wives appear so bored when seen together outside their home?

You'll think they had not one thing in common to talk about—the way so many preserve that silent gaze.

The only time that either smiles is when a third party joins them.

It is then that they're in love and happy and contented just to be together.

In some instances this happy state exists around married couples, and to observe quietly the couples around you in a public gathering you'd doubt it.

There is no prettier sight than married life with their families who talk in an animated way with one another—and bright and happy children.

How much more pleasant the picture than the one in which husband and wife scowl secrets on their faces, voices raised in raucous tones as each command or reprimand their little charges.

The grouchy parent is a jab of happiness on any night envoy.

If temper is largely a habit that growing may had. Miss Mordon best helped the hostess entertain the guests.

SHIPPING IS ON INCREASE

Harbor Master Robert Goudy Gives Report To Commission

Harbor Master Robert Goudy reported recently presented to the Belleville Harbor Commissioners, his report of the activities on the local harbor during the year 1932. The figures show an appreciable increase in the total tonnage handled in the year ending from Belleville by water; 11,735 tons more were loaded in 1932 than in 1931, and an increase in the passengers carried, despite this additional tonnage.

Belleville Shipbuilding Centre.

Outside shippers are recognizing the value of the government dock and warehouse here, and despite inconveniences, and Belleville is growing year by year as the centre for the distribution over a large area, of various commodities, which reach the city by water. Gasoline, flour and sugar were the principal freights of this nature by water during the past year, with gasoline more than double the amount brought in the previous year.

The value to the city of the harbor, government dock and warehouse is growing yearly and Belleville is fortunate in having the harbor improvements, and the building of the government dock in the early 90's. It also speaks well for the foresight of the citizens of Belleville, then, and well also for the capable business administration of the present Harbor Commissioners. This Commission is comprised of Geo. P. Cleaton, chairman; Fred. Platt, secretary-treasurer (these two members appointed by the provincial government), and the Mayor in office who makes up this Commission.

Improvements The Present Year.

The lighting system at the dock is to be improved during the present season the coming year, and will be extended. In the estimates now before parliament $52,000 is marked for improvements at Belleville harbor, and this is to be used for the deepening of the channel to the dock to permit access to a deeper draught to enter the harbor. According to the Commission's present plans the dredgings from this operation will be deposited to the east of the dock and part of the marsh there filled in. The Commission believes that the warehouse has become inadequate to house the freight now handled and that not only necessarily have to be enlarged, and either of two plans will be used, providing an extension at the north of it. Tonnage For 1932

Tonnage handled for the 1932 season shows as follows: Inward 1932 tons; outward 25261; 1931 6574; August 7768; September 4761; October 2309; November 1475; December 1000; total tons, a total of 32,850 tons; of this amount 29,645 tons were coal, freight and 3405 outward. In 1931 the total tonnage amounted to 21,115 tons, of which 17,406 was inward and 3708 outward. Inward freights increased in 1932 15,000 tons, while the outward tag declined 261 tons leaving a net increase of 11,735 tons for the year. General merchandise shipments through the harbor also have shown a marked increase in 1932, but there were no consignments of lumber from Corbyville which the dock was built to handle. Grain and flour also showed a marked increase in 1932, but there were no consignments of lumber from Corbyville which the dock was built to handle. Grain and flour also showed a marked increase in 1932, but there were no consignments of lumber from Corbyville which the dock was built to handle. Grain and flour also showed a marked increase in 1932, but there were no consignments of lumber from Corbyville which the dock was built to handle.

Incoming boats brought to the port in 1932, 4845 tons of coal, 3729 tons of coke, 1000 tons of flour, 1000 tons of gasoline and cargoes of 3676 tons of miscellaneous goods.

During the season there were 130 yachts of various sizes visited the harbor for stops of varying length.

SUN LIFE IS GIVEN AWARD

Jury Finds Paper Libel For Statements Issued

London, March 21 (CP Cable) Damages of £19,000, approximately $77,700 in Canadian funds were awarded the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada today by a jury here in the libel suit brought against Gordon Stewart, in a libel suit against the printers, publishers and editor of the paper called the "City Midweek."

Counsel described the writings as "most terrible libels."

Before the court proceedings the defense had been struck out, the day permitted one defendant to withdraw. Chief Justice Lawrence witnesses and address the jury.

The company which published the paper is now in liquidation, and the editor declared bankrupt.

SEPARATE QUARTERS UNTIL TRIAL TIME

This Procedure Recommended by Justice Wright

Cornwall, Ont., March 21 (CP)—Separate quarters should be provided for persons confined, while awaiting trial, Mr. Justice Wright told the Grand Jury at the opening of the Spring Assizes here. He was presiding for the first time prior to their inspection of the jail.

Of the two first criminal cases on the docket the chief interest is in that of Arnold Redmond, 17-year-old high school student of Iroquois who is charged with attempt to murder his principal, Mr. Beaupre. He is alleged to have attacked and stabbed the teacher with a hunting knife in the classroom.

The Grand Jury is expected to present its report today if a true bill is returned the trial will proceed.

TEXT OF BUDGET SPEECH BY HON. E. N. RHODES

Ottawa, March 21 (CP)—Hon. E. N. Rhodes, the Finance Minister, opened his speech this afternoon with a review of the "world financial crisis" and the "economic blizzard" which began in Austria in the spring of 1931, and spread from country to country, crippling financial institutions, and finally paralyzing the machinery of finance and industry. Mr. Rhodes sketched the various developments that marked the progress of the depression, the departure of the United Kingdom from the gold standard, and the effect of the "economic safety" of country by institutes control of exchange and trade, and withdrawing themselves from unfair competition arising out of depreciated currencies.

"Though departure from the gold standard in the United Kingdom had brought benefits, trade and monetary prices had been falling steadily since March, 1931, the Minister continued, but there was an upward movement between the United States and Great Britain in June and July of last summer. The conference on debts and the Ottawa Imperial Economic Conference, also added materially to the creation of an atmosphere favorable to business progress.

"The third quarter of 1932 was a period of great disappointment to the world industry and business sentiment," he said.

U. S. Banking Crisis

"But the improvement was not maintained," Mr. Rhodes continued, "and since last December special trade, industrial production and wholesale prices have once more tended downwards. In the United States, of late decline, the failure of the war debt negotiations has been a factor, and though not the sole factor. During this time there has been a recurrence of banking troubles in the United States of unto south of us, and new storms have appeared on the political horizon in Europe.

"A significance of this banking crisis, Mr. Rhodes said, in many instances, it is not necessary for me to recount. It is sufficient for me to warn against too gloomy an interpretation of current happenings. Events that may seem well-nigh disastrous in themselves may nevertheless be necessary as a consequence of the radical changes in public attitude and governmental policy which will make possible a fundamental and lasting solution of many of the difficulties which beset the world.

"We cannot fail to observe that the present crisis is international, both in its origin and its effects, and that the remedy must be sought in international understanding and co-operation.

Rise In Levies Necessary

"Therefore, I look forward hopefully to the World Economic and Monetary Conference which is expected to meet in London in the near future, and to which we propose to give our whole-hearted support.

"I am hopeful that a programme can be worked out for the stabilization of exchange controls and other economic restrictions, for international trade, for the stabilization of currencies, for the maintenance of a rise in the world level of wholesale prices. The success of this conference depends in great measure on the settlement of the war debts question, and on the improvement of political fears and relations as a result of which there may be an adjustment discussions or otherwise.

"Until these fundamental conditions can be achieved, it should be possible to reach agreement whereby governments would be effective in restoring world confidence and initiating an era of stability and closer activity.

"The course of industrial production and physical volume of business in Canada has been more closely that of the other leading countries. Fortunately, since the first of the year there has been a moderate improvement in wheat prices and those who are interested will-informed are hopeful that this improvement will be maintained.

Rise in Wheat Prices

"I do not need to emphasize that if this rise in wheat prices can be sustained and extended it would be other single development could be of more importance in restoring business recovery and reviving the spirit of confidence.

"It is a matter of satisfaction that relatively the position of Canada among the great trading countries has been so well maintained in 1932, Canada again ranked fifth, after having been seventh in 1931. An examination of the statistics also reveals that the loss in dollar value of total trade in 1932 was proportionately not as great for Canada as for other important trading countries.

Following is a statement of Canada's foreign trade for the first 11 months of this fiscal year.

Trade of Canada

The figures given below are in thousands, and three cents equal a Eleven Months : Ended Feb. 28, 1933 Decrease Imports ..... $373,421 $147,655 Exports, Canadian produce 497,539 99,396 Exports, Foreign produce 322 420 Total ..... $ 871,282 $ 248,471

"It is noteworthy that, despite the unfavorable conditions which have prevailed, there has been a progressive improvement in the balance of trade, in the first eleven months of the fiscal year, ended February 28, the excess of exports over imports was $76,944,000 as compared with favorable showing as compared with favorable balance of $25,680,000 in the corresponding period of the previous year, and a complete reversal of the position in the 12 months ended February 28, 1932, when the trade showed an unfavorable balance of $51,264,000.

"Although the tariff agreements arising out of the Imperial Economic Conference have been in force for only a few months, the preferences range are not yet fully reflected in the trade statistics, significant developments have taken place in the relations to our trade with Empire countries during the year.

"In the 10 months ended January, 1933, the total value of Canada's trade statistics by countries are arranged, Canada's exports to various parts of the Empire were slightly greater than in the same period in 1932, and to the United States they had increased by some seven million dollars. In addition, the decline in Empire imports was much less, relatively, than in respect of non-Empire imports.

"Trade trends reflecting the inter-Empire improvement of goods are as follows:

Inter-Empire Trade in Canada

"Over, expressed as percentages of total trade, figures clearly indicate the trend towards increased inter-Empire trade, comparing the 10 month ended Jan. 31, 1933, Imports from the United Kingdom were 29.13 per cent. of total trade, as against 26.77 per cent. during the previous corresponding period. The imports from the United Kingdom, the chief gains have been in textiles, coal, manufactures of iron and steel, and in the case of coal to the United Kingdom are concerned, progressive improvement is registered in many products of the farm, mine and forest.

Gold at World Price

"It will be recalled that after Great Britain departed from gold standard, the export of gold from Canada was prohibited and gold was purchased by the government at the world price. This practice was continued, and the receipt of the Bank of Canada, and during the course, have been obtainable by importers of gold. Under these circumstances, the export of gold has been practically confined to the purchase of the public.

"Recently, however, events much for the prospect of future recovery, that the world price of gold, in terms of dollars or her foreign commitments without undue risk, and the Canadian special structure continues intact the Bank of Canada has been authorized to sell gold in the markets of the world.

"The continuance of the decline in Canadian trade and in wholesale prices had the inevitable effect, in Canada as in other countries, of discontinuing fall in public revenues. This was particularly marked in taxation revenue from which the Dominion derived over 70 per cent. of its total receipts."

The major sources of taxation revenue, the sales tax alone will yield the sum estimated. When the fiscal year ended March 31st, income tax receipts, as now estimated by the government, will exceed by compared with an estimate of $90,000,000 and will be $10,000,000 previous fiscal year of $41,356,000.

"The customs tariff is still main as a contributor to the $ million treasury, but its yield of $70,000,000 will be $10,000,000 less than the customs revenues of last year.

Sales Tax Third

"Because of the increase in the rate from 4 per cent. to 6 per cent. the sales tax will take the third place in the list of revenue producers. Though the higher rate was not fully effective during the entire year, the return will exceed $40,000,000. The estimate is based that of the income tax and the customs tariff. The sales tax advocate that our dollar should be tied to sterling as the best course open to others who criticise what they misleadingly believe to be a policy of pegging our dollar to the dollar of New York. This is not the time to enter into a discussion of this difficult and complicated question. Suffice it for me to say that no dollar has been allowed to find its own level and that is not the case with the fluctuating about half-way between the United States dollar and the English pound.

Penny and Sterling

"In so doing it may be working but a not unsatisfactory compromise between the two extremes. The effects which would be benefitted by the close and stable relations with sterling, and those on the other hand, which would be seriously harmed by a heavy and fluctuating discount in the United States dollar.

"The financial and monetary policies which have been followed have also contributed to the efficient working or our internal credit and currency system, which is one of the few countries that has been able to retain a market for new long-term financing, and the volume of long-term capital issues which were floated in the domestic market last year was not only a splendid tribute, not only to the efficiency of our investment and banking institutions, but also to the thrift of the Canadian people and the underlying strength of our economic position.

"Excluding short-term and refunding loans, a total of $267,000,000 was issued in the fiscal year. It is interesting to note that over $15,000,000 was secured by Canadian borrowers from the London market, three provinces and two municipalities availing their first sterling issues since 1914.

Dead Hand of Past

"The dead hand of past lavish expenditure and unbalanced still weighs heavily upon all public bodies. While public revenues keep falling, debt charges persist and increase, consuming an ever-growing proportion of total current receipts. This serious situation to which reference is now receiving the attention of the governments of the several provinces of this House.

"Without touching upon this field, may I say that the policy of this government is to keep down expenditures upon the public debt as low as possible by maintaining the credit of Canada at the lowest rate to raise new funds and convert maturing issues into the most economical basis.

"Then the opportune moment arrives, we propose to offer a conversion issue to the public of this country. But it will be on a basis that will keep faith with investors and will not, in any way, involve repudiation of existing contracts. Under such conditions, which, as I can be made, it is believed, as a result of which involve a substantial saving to the public treasury.

Interest on Deposits

"May I refer also, at this time, to a matter which has received some attention in the public press, namely, the movement on the part of the Bank of Canada and financial institutions to reduce the interest rate on bank deposits. In my judgment this reduction is a desirable one, and I hope to reduce the interest rate on bank loans, on a corresponding basis, with effect to a level where business recovery will be most effectively stimulated. I do not, however, think the extent to which it will ease the burden of fixed charges which it would, if applied to the public debt. Nevertheless, the government is prepared to co-operate in any reduction in the rate of interest paid on postal savings deposits.

Banks Maintain Position

"Finally, I wish to refer to the contribution of the chartered banks to the orderly financing of our economic activities. Throughout the severest financial storm that has fully maintained its enviable position, operating under conditions unparalleled in the history of banking in Canada, a feature of the banks is the ability to meet the demands and the discount on sterling securities purchased below par for sinking fund purposes. This makes a total revenue for the year of $301,000.

The amount voted for capital expenditures was $76,871,000 of which $8,123,000 will be spent. Last year the expenditure on capital account amounted to $16,960,000 and for the year 1930-31 the expenditure was $38,222,000.

The two chief items in this classification are wheat loans and unemployment relief. The carry-over of wheat loans from last year and current fiscal year is $1,936,360 making a total advance of $3,936,360 against $13,734,880—considerably larger than was at first anticipated because of the unexpectedly large crop of 1931

Unemployment Relief

"On unemployment relief, the total expenditure during the year will be $25,000,000, which is the same amount than the current annual rate of relief for the fact that there was carried over from the previous year a large expenditure in respect to the Dominion government's share of the cost of relief works, which commenced in the autumn of last year. The amount required for payment some time after the actual expenditures were incurred by the provinces and municipalities.

The whole expenditure may be summarizing as follows:

Public Works, $12,331,100; direct relief (including Saskatchewan relief Commission, $4,800,000), $19,-290,382; miscellaneous expenditures of Dominion projects, $3,441,520. Total, $76,871,000.

"The Prairie Provinces, in the form of loans for seed grain and fuel, and $922,000 for relief assistance in the form or loans for seed grain

West Indian Service

"Dropping the 1932-33 expenditures together as in the following comparative table, it will be observed that the total of the government expenditures for the year amounted to $457,998,000 as compared with $448 072,000 in 1931-32, a reduction of $30,000,000.

Grouping the 1932-33 expenditures together as in the following comparative table, it will be observed that the total of government expenditures for the year amounted to $417,990,000 as compared with $448,-072,000 in 1931-32, a reduction of $30,800,000.

Summary of Expenditures.

The summary of expenditures estimated 1932-33:

Ordinary expenditures $364,425,000
Capital expenditures 9,123,000
Special expenditures 43,485,000
Loans and advances non-active 1,959,000

Total $417,990,000

C.N.R. Advances

"All of the money required for the Canadian National Railways in 1932 was provided from the Dominion Treasury.

"Taking the system as a whole from operating revenues suffered a decline of $27,000,000 and $36,-000,000 as compared with the previous year. Notwithstanding that the management paralleled this decrease by a reduction of $44,000,000 in operating expenses, the net financial result for the year, after absorbing $13,617,000 which is the amount that the resulting deficit on ordinary account was $7,000,000.

"When the budget was brought down in May last, it was estimated that the taxation proposals then submitted would increase the receipts from taxation by $40,000,000 and be at least a balancing of the budget. Notwithstanding drastic cuts in expenditure, as has been indicated the deficit is now estimated at $70,000,000. The explanation for the deficiency on ordinary account is the shrinkage in the yield of the taxes of revenues to attain the expected yield of the new taxes and the continuance in business activity. In the balance sheet of the year the receipts from transfer from active to non-active assets of $41,000,000 of advances to the Canadian National Railways in 1931-32, and of $36,000,000 of loans to Dominion commissions, as already referred to.

Arrears Of All Finances.

"The Dominion has been able to arrange for all of its financial and capital requirements during the year, including provision for maintaining arrears in the financing of the Canadian National Railways.

"The net requirements of the Dominion in the form of unmatured funded debt are listed in the following statement:

Payable in Canada ...$2,013,901,570.85
Payable in Great Britain 690,001,724.51
Payable in London .. 311,668,136.39

Total $2,715,910,007.24
Less sinking funds 66,001,724.51

$2,649,908,282.73

Annual interest charge $127,039,490.13

"The statistical presentation of the Dominion's financial position is completed with the attendance of the balance sheet enumerating the assets and liabilities thereof as at March 31, total liabilities are shown at $2,649,908,282.73, after deducting from this amount active assets made up of cash balances, specie reserve, investments, loans and current and the resultant net debt is shown at $2,500,929,000.

Farmers of Manitoba, resident in areas where surveys have shown German repatriates to be numerous in the soil, are being advised to plough in the fall deeply and to work the soil to minimize the expected "hopper" outbreak in 1933.

In the 11 months ended February 1933 exports exceeded imports in value by $76,546,000; in the same period of the previous years this favorable balance was $25,241,000 and for the corresponding period in 1930-31 imports exceeded exports by $79,534,000.

Gold production in Canada during 1932 is expected to each $67,000,000 as compared with $63,000,000 in 1931, and $16,000,000 in 1913.

Advances to date to nine Harbor Commissions total $13,925,000. Of this total $54,000 has been repaid. Halifax and St. John's Saint John will be transferred to the non-active category of investments because of the unsatisfactory conditions of those commissions.

GOVERNMENT

Canada's Power Trust

Canada's first monetary revision of the Bank Act next year. The question of establishing a central bank of issue will be studied. Conclusion reached by the commission was will become the basis for study by the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons next session.

Postal Savings Interest

The government is prepared to co-operate with the chartered banks in lowering interest rates by reducing the rate paid on postal savings deposits. The Banks Minister declared in favour of reduced interest rates as savings bank deposits.

"In my judgment," he said, "this reduction is a necessity in order to reduce the interest rate at bank loans. Mortgages and on long-term bonds to a level where business recovery will be most effectively stimulated." He paid a tribute to the Canadian banks. "Under the most severe financial storm that history records, they operate fully maintained its enviable reputation, meeting every demand upon it and retaining the fullest confidence of the public," was the Minister's remark.

"Canada's position is fundamentally sound—the only material position "only by the maintenance of sound financial and monetary policies," Mr. Rhodes emphasized.

Imperial Bargain

"Much has been heard in recent months about inflation," he continued. "Those who have vociferously claimed for inflation may seem already to be justified by the present upward drift and declining turnover, but let the sponsors of inflation be warned that the time for the other difficulties and dangers involved in the proposal is past. The inevitable result would be a flight of capital, the withdrawal on a large scale of the capital invested by foreigners in this country in the form of securities and in other ways. There are also to be considered the effects upon our trade with which might impair confidence in a depreciated currency.

Optimism characterized the declarations with respect to Canada's trade. While announcing a drop of $250,821,000 in the foreign trade of Canada during the 11 months ended February 28 last, as compared with the corresponding period a year ago Mr. Rhodes found cause for congratulation.

It is a matter of satisfaction that relatively the position of Canada among the great trading countries has been so well maintained," he said. "Canada again, in 1932 ranked fifth, after having been seventh in 1931. An examination of the statistics also reveals that the loss in dollar value of total trade in 1932 was proportionately not as great for Canada as for other important trading countries.

Following is a statement of Canada's foreign trade for the first 11 months of this fiscal year.

The figures given below are in thousands, and three cents equal a

	Eleven Months : Ended Feb. 28, 1933	Decrease

Exports, Canadian produce	497,539	99,396
Exports, Foreign produce	322	420
Total	$ 871,282	$ 248,471

"It is noteworthy that, despite the unfavorable conditions which have prevailed, there has been a progressive improvement in the balance of trade, in the first eleven months of the fiscal year, ended February 28, the excess of exports over imports was $76,944,000 as compared with favorable showing as compared with favorable balance of $25,680,000 in the

Capital Structure Problems

"In so far as the accounts of the railway company are concerned, the ultimate liability for the government's advance, prior to the year 1932, representing capital expenditures and current expenditures, will be governed by the action of the proposed board of trustees to whom the control and management of the railways will be entrusted. The royal commission has recommended that the question of the capital structure of the system have the early attention of the board of trustees. It should be borne in mind that the fate of the government's accounts are contingent upon the future earnings of the railway advances as non-active assets, has already been dealt with in this year's government debt, as at March 31, 1933, the funded debt of the Canadian National Railways on the public will amount to about $1,500,000,000 and the total debt to $1,000,000,000 after deducting sinking funds.

"The Dominion continued to purchase at par the Canadian Farm Loan Board's 5 per cent. bonds issued to the extent that loaning operations required. Bonds purchased during the year to $650,000 and a subscription of $70,630 was made to capital stock. The Dominion Treasury for the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board, $37,115, divided as follows:

Initial capital	$5,058,000
Less repayments	650,000
Purchase of capital stock :	437,115
		$4,137,115

"Having presented the revenues and expenditures under the appropriate classifications, we are now in a position to indicate the net result of the year's transactions for the year. Minor adjustments have to be made before the accounts are closed, but the figures given are believed to approximate the final balances for the year.

Ordinary Deficit $3 Millions.

"With ordinary expenditures totalling $364,425,000 and revenues of $310,817,000 it will be observed that the resulting deficit on ordinary account was $53,688,000.

"When the budget was brought down in May last, it was estimated that the taxation proposals then submitted would increase the receipts from taxation by $40,000,000 and be at least a balancing of the budget. Notwithstanding drastic cuts in expenditure, as has been indicated the deficit is now estimated at $70,000,000. The explanation for the deficiency on ordinary account is the shrinkage in the yield of the taxes of revenues to attain the expected yield of the new taxes and the continuance in business activity. In the balance sheet of the year the receipts from transfer from active to non-active assets of $41,000,000 of advances to the Canadian National Railways in 1931-32, and of $36,000,000 of loans to Dominion commissions, as already referred to.

Arrears Of All Finances.

"The Dominion has been able to arrange for all of its financial and capital requirements during the year, including provision for maintaining arrears in the financing of the Canadian National Railways.

"The net requirements of the Dominion in the form of unmatured funded debt are listed in the following statement:

Payable in Canada ...	$2,013,901,570.85
Payable in Great Britain	690,001,724.51
Payable in London ..	311,668,136.39
Total	$2,715,910,007.24
Less sinking funds	66,001,724.51
	$2,649,908,282.73

Annual interest charge $127,039,490.13

"The statistical presentation of the Dominion's financial position is completed with the attendance of the balance sheet enumerating the assets and liabilities thereof as at March 31, total liabilities are shown at $2,649,908,282.73, after deducting from this amount active assets made up of cash balances, specie reserve, investments, loans and current and the resultant net debt is shown at $2,500,929,000.

Gold Production of Canada

Canada is the second largest producer of gold, Mr. Rhodes said, in discussing financial conditions in the Dominion. It is estimated that the production for the present calendar year will be $67,000,000.

With respect to the value of the Canadian dollar, the Finance Minister said that the dollar had been maintained as a moderate discount in terms of the United States dollar. "Those who would tie Canada's own level and as a result it has been fluctuating about half-way between the United States dollar and the English pound. This might be a not unsatisfactory compromise between those who would be benefited by close and stable relations with sterling, and those, on the other hand who would be seriously harmed by a heavy and fluctuating discount in United States dollars.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

"My con't come home until morning," the banker said coldly, "and I'm furious at you." Then he went on, "I'll forgive you some way or some day, Chow; no some way to go home." In China it is not done, I know. The code of honor that binds a Chinaman to his word is his weakness, but it is also his strength. Ah Sam listened with a queer light in his eyes; he surveyed his employer finally by rising and saying he would go.

That proved to be a strange experience for Sam: he felt as if he were on his own. Certainly he was more free and would have given much if he had been able to see the latter part of his master's visit. In the latter it was romantic and sensational. Nothing to Sam if he knew it. Decidedly sordid and shocking. The sight of women in the arms of Chinese, Japanese, Filipino and Mexican gentlemen was the first shock of his resentment. It was an abnormality that he found it hard to understand and he could not tell why. His white mind was working again to do double.

May took him first to a place of vapid Broadway type, no good like any other public dance hall except that all the men were escorts and dancing floor was fenced in by a railing which, opening at certain ticket takers were posted: between dances the girls seated on benches inside the railing. There were three men present for every woman.

The dances lasted only four or five minutes and the intermissions were less. As a result of this the orchestra stopped playing barely long enough for the floor to be cleared after one ticket to be collected. These tickets were 10 cents each and were sold in books. May said that girls received 1 cent a dance and that some of them made as much as ten dollars a night just from commissions.

Ten dollars a night, two hundred dances. Sam wondered how many miles these girls covered in an evening. Fortunately for them the modern dance is not exhausting.

Of course his presence became known. Soon there was a crowding of heads, the girls stared at him in open curiosity and talked among themselves. The proprietor of the Hall, a meticulous Japanese, presented himself with a low bow and his appreciation. One of the boons was some him.

Sam thanked him and explained that, for tonight at least, he was only slight-seeing. Curiously he put several questions which were answered frankly.

Yes, this went on every night. Police? Why should the police make trouble for a licensed dance hall, open to the public and run in strict observance of local ordinances and the prohibition law? It was an orderly place and white men were welcome although, happily, they did not patronize it. Investigators, police women occasionally visited the place and a few young girls had been arrested on complaints of their parents, but most of the girls had their parents' consent to work here — some even brought their mothers along. Would not Mr. Lee accept and use a book of tickets? A dozen books? Some of the girls were pretty. Many were agreeably young. No?

The speaker shrugged and nodded. He understood perfectly. A gentleman of Mr. Lee's consequence must exercise discretion in the pursuit of his amusements.

"To you I will present select address," he said, "where matters will be found more agreeable to your liking. Surroundings are more rich and satisfactory than of here and the management is correct. Police and visits of the non-shopworn young ladies of the more refining classes can be arranged by me. I am of excellent organization." He wrote on a card he wrote: 3 Ryvide Drive number and this he handed to Sam.

Curiously prompted the latter to drive uptown to the address given; it was that of a handsome private house. This was a "club", however, hence it was furnished and run on a more pretentious scale than the public hall. The revelers were better dressed and no attempt was made to separate them between dances, but otherwise the procedure was about the same. There was the same turmoil and the dances were equally short.

Here, however, Sam was recognized and a good deal was made over him. When at a late hour he was escorted to Chinatown it was with a deeper feeling of gratification. He was a people than he had ever supposed, and, strangely enough, superficially. He made him laugh bitterly. They presumed to know what was in his heart, to know what he was thinking, to see through his calm and whipped him. What a confusing attitude!

A few days later Sam's lawyer called on what he announced to be an extraordinary errand. The visitor was indignant and he explained his feelings by saying:

"You remember that fellow Hines who had a part in the Mona Lowrey affair?"

"I'm not likely to forget him," Sam declared.

"Well, he has turned up again. He came to see me today on behalf of that Hart girl! The girl you helped send back."

Sam stared incredulously at the speaker. "Do you mean that what has happened to her? Perhaps I'd better say what has not happened?"

"Alice Hart is back here in New York and threatening action. Black-mail, of course. Settlement out of court. Did you ever write her any letters?"

"No doubt."

Hines referred to several which breathed poetic devotion of an ardent nature, also to pointed attentions, expensive gifts. He gave you to understand that for a week or more at a New York hotel and that she visited your home."

"All true."

"There's no denying the fact that your father sent her to Paris and footed her bills up to the time of his death. Hines contends that a jury would consider such an action as due to the interest of a prospective father-in-law. I dare say if you had continued to live this bill we would have heard nothing from her."

There was a peculiar light in Sam's eyes when he said: "Miss Hart is a very charming girl and I gave more than food for her. What's more, I would have married her gladly. I infer that she has altered her feeling for me and discovers it to be love."

"Analyzed your bank account!"

"Anyhow she consents to become my wife."

"She does more than consent. She demands."

"Very well. I'll marry her. Provided that she shall be the proud mistress of my three-roofed house, that she shall wear robes and ornaments enhancing moonlight and set delicate foods from the hilltops of the world porcelain bowls. A hundred docile servants shall bow to her—but no my sister need be present with me. Tell her merely to come and see me, so that my heart may speak its own message."

"Come here?" The attorney looked incredulous.

"Oh, the Illustrious Hines may come with her! He should do so. He'll be one to be well rewarded. He's the one to arrange the bridal settlements and such things. A quaint and amusing custom, isn't it?"

Mr. Carter left in a good deal of a huff.

Sam's message, as relayed by his attorney, was not wholly pleasing to Everett Hines, but Carter declined to do more than report Sam's counter-demand, so an appointment was finally arranged and on the afternoon of Alice and the companion appeared.

Miss Hart, who was under a high nervous strain, rose and peered furtively through the half-open door, then she motioned to Hines, and Sam Lee was surveyed on a couch at the far end of the room. He was in a magnificently colored robe and one languid arm was around the waist of a shiny-haired Chinese girl. Another girl, who held a thin-necked stringed instrument in her hands and was seated on a cushion: both were in loose Oriental jacket and pajama-like trousers, both were giggling and tittering. The visitors retreated noiselessly to their chairs.

Mrs. Everett, he bowed them into his master's presence. Sam Lee had risen from the couch and he invited them to be seated. He took Alice's hand and kissed it, he ran his gaze over her and in a voice unnaturally thick and queerly discordant he began a ceremonial speech of greeting. The two Chinese girls had retreated across the room and were pretending to look out of a window into the rear garden. They stole occasional glances over their shoulders, chattered excitedly to each other and exchanged confidential giggles.

Alice noticed something else, too. On a tabouret beside the couch was a quaintly shaped pipe, a pellet of all large and other articles which evidently went with them. An opium layout! The girl was a smoker!

That accounted for his behaviour, for his bewildered speech.

Everett Hines was speaking now, he and Sam were exchanging courtesies that Sam thought rather stiff, but there was no rancor. How Chinese Sam had become! And what a change in Chinatown it was with a deeper feeling of gratification. It was people than he had ever supposed, and, strangely enough, superficially. He made him laugh bitterly. They presumed to know what was in his heart, to know what he was thinking, to see through his calm and whipped him. What a confusing attitude!

MAR 21 MR. AND MRS.— AN INSIDER WHO EXPECTS FAVORS WITHOUT SECURITY

TARZAN AND THE GOLDEN LION. No. 4

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs.

Native villages in the heart of the dark continent are fairly numerous. So it was that the day he found the ceb, Tarzan and his family left the homeward trail and came to one of these collections of huts to obtain milk for the young lion. Great excitement followed their approach. The natives viewed the three whites with curiosity. They saw them almost as naked as themselves and armed similarly, save that the younger man also carried a rifle. Jane, Tarzan and Korak were the barbaric trappings of Palui-don and so were entirely strange to the eyes of the simple natives.

"Where is your chief?" asked Tarzan, as he strode into the village amongst the women, children and yapping curs. A few dozing warriors arose from the cool shadows and one replied, "the chief sleeps. Who are you to awaken him?" "Tell him," continued the ape-man, "that Tarzan would speak with him." Instantly the attitude of his listeners changed. Though they had never seen him, all knew, feared and respected the very name of Tarzan, Lord of the Jungle. The simple blacks fell back in awe—their eyes very wide and round.

Then there was a great commotion. The natives brought mats for the guests and food and presents, all to honor this distinguished visitor. Presently Umanga, the chief, appeared. An old man, he had been chief even before Tarzan of the Apes was born. He greeted his guest as one great man might greet another. Yet he was undeniably pleased that the Lord of the Jungle had honored his village with a visit. Two days after, when they departed, among Umbaga's gift was a fine mother dog to feed and care for Tarzan's lion cub.

It was only infinite patience on the ape-man's part that the two animals overcame their fear of each other. Both were terrified at the enemy-scent of the other. But at last the thing was accomplished, and as the three set out toward home once more, the dog trotted on a leash beside Tarzan. The baby lion he carried cuddled in the hollow of his strong arm. "Za" they called the dog. And they named the lion Jah-bal-ja, which in the language of Pal ul-don means "The Golden Lion," because of his color.

REDMEN EVEN SERIES WITH MEN OF NORTH

Defeat Sudbury Wolves 3-1 to Force Third Game

PENALTIES HUNT

Wolves Short Handed When Both Goals Scored

Toronto, Mar. 21 (CP) — They haven't decided yet if Syd Howe's men out of the memorial cup race will send so far as $1,000 or so, but satiated Duff-seekers can see a lot more hair are going to be thrown into the air before the season ends from York County and Sudbury's Wolves wind up their series.

The 13,000 faithful payees, who have been thawing out in Maple Gardens every time the Redmen get out there since they downed Toronto Native Sons in the junior O.H.A. semi-final series, literally turned handsprings last night when the Redmen became the Redmen we.

They upset the Wolves, defenders of the Ontario junior hockey championship, 2-1, in a classic battle of sparkling gem a notch or two higher in the ethics of the sport than to decide which-team meets Oshawa Shamrocks in the league's all semi-final. The deciding contest will be played Wednesday night.

The Redmen, great little- battlers when they are behind, got behind sure enough when Ivan Hall in the second period went the Wolves scored the first goal of the game and ten minutes later the Bill Hancock-coached crowd had it tied up at 1-1.

With less than four minutes of the third period remaining, and another overtime fight looming in the corner, Pep Kelly banged in the winning goal. His shattered stick on a defence weakened by a penalty to Bob McGregor. Hall shot the puck past goalie Bill Durbano as he was busily checked to the ice.

Adelard Le Rouge, hero of Sudbury's final series with the Winnipeg Monarchs in the West last spring, gave the Wolves a lead with a minute and a half left in the second when Akey and Henderson proved all-star line material for their opponents while West looked the best of the Sudbury defence. For the losing team Anderson in the nets turned in his usual steady game. The second line of Lee flanked by High and Mahlo proved a much greater threat than did the starting line of the team from along the Trunk. The line-up:

Both clubs were short handed to a certain degree with the green and white taking to the ice minus the services of Bentley and Mason, two newly acquired players from Napance, while the Stones did not use Wright or Copperwaite, both of whom are on the injured list. Despite the fact that the clubs were short-handed the usual amount of rivalry was injected into the pastime.

Both goal tenders turned in brilliant accounts of their goal tending abilities with Tice over-shadowing Hahn throughout. The bulk of the evening's work was carried by the defencemen of each team as has been the case throughout when these two teams meet. Alex Weir, who was pressed into service at the last minute by the green and white, bagged the green and white's first tally when he batted home a rebound after Nicoll and Covert had taken a shot at Hahn with the latter having played along the right boards with the "kid line" of which Covert took out the best three.

No sooner did the second frame open than the locals came through scoring when MacDonald scored a pretty goal on Pete Morgan's well-timed pass. Towards the end of the second twenty minutes MacKay beat Tice with a bid for a hat-trick when he drifted home the old boy's best after Davis and Fred Ingram had taken pot shots at the local net custodian. To assure the local a victory Alex Weir, who was camped in front of the Stones net, whipped home the rubber on a pass out from Covert in the dying minutes of the last chukker.

MADOC WIN

"Yellow Jackets" Now Leading Their Group With Two Wins

The Madoc "yellow jackets" topped into command of first position in group "B" of the Belleville and District junior-senior league when they defeated the Trenton basement-ites by the score of 3 to 1 with the Belleville Cities Service crowd in front of the Campbellford Maroons in the night-cap affair by the same score to pull up even with the league leading Trenton "Imperials" in group "A" after a double header session on the local arena last night.

The opening game presented a hurdy gurdy affair with both teams seemingly a shade below the brand of hockey when the players batted and gotted the rubber around almost at random. Only occasionally sparse-ances of what really looked like Canada's national game was dished up when the players bunched and prodded around each other in an open-pond-like affair.

Trenton opened the scoring when Smith took a pass from Lemoire on the initial frame and made sure of the shot to beat Smyth. The Trenton-ites' lead was short-lived, however, as Jack Henderson on a solo rush evened the count shortly afterwards to end the scoring in the first period. From then on the hefty Madoc outfit predominated in the play and added two more goals in the second frame when Doc Wrylock scored on a solo rush and Henderson again flashed the red light following the scramble in front of the Trenton net, the scoring was registered in the final stanza.

For the winning team Scopis tended a real smart game, while D. Wrylock looked the best of the rear guard. The combination of Akey, Akey and Henderson proved all-star line material for their opponents while West looked the best of the Sudbury-ites. For the losing team Anderson in the nets turned in his usual steady game. Allen Cup May Go East for First Time

Moncton Hawks Nurse 2 Goal Lead Over Royals

Toronto, Mar. 21 (CP)—Maritime hopes of taking the Allan Cup down by the Atlantic for the first time there bolstered today as Moncton Hawks nursed a two-goal lead for their second game with Quebec's Montreal Royals, Toronto teams, over night. Two quick goals in three minutes of the third period gave Moncton a 3-0 victory in the first game last night.

Goals by Ted James and Bill Gill decided the game after the teams had battled through two scoreless sessions. James took a pass from Bill Miller for the first goal and Gill raced from his defence position for the other.

In the only Memorial Cup playdown, Newmarket's hustling juniors carried their series with the corn defenders, Sudbury Wolves, when they won the second game of a total of three round 2-1. The deciding game will be played Wednesday night.

SENATORS IN A NEW DEAL

Expect to Make Trouble For Yankees From The Start

BY RALPH WHEATLEY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Boloni, Miss., Mar. 1. — In tune with the times, the Washington Senators have declared a new deal and have set out to strike down the Yankees and bring home the pennant. They will not be satisfied with anything less.

Clark Griffith has turned to youth, spirit and speed for the offensive and has placed in command the 36-year kid manager of big league baseball, Joe Cronin, who was wearing rompers when his predecessor, Walter Johnson, was striking them out with his smoke ball.

Griffith and his manager went into a swapping fest and traded off Reynolds, Weir, Brown, Marberry and Spencer and brought in Stewart, Whitehill, Schulte, Goslin and Sewell.

The start of the season will find Goslin in right field, Manush in left field, Schulte in center, Cronin at third base, Myer at second, Kuhel at first, Peckinpaugh at shortstop, and Sewell as catcher.

O.S.D. RAMBLERS WIN AT TWEED

High School Team of Northern Town Not Fast Enough

The O.S.D. Ramblers journeyed to Tweed on Monday night and took the measure of the Tweed Hi-mio camp by the score of 4 to 3. The game was a decidedly fast and fairly fast in spots Neither team was at all strength, but were quite evenly matched. The first period saw both teams make the better of the play with Merrette, Bostnart, and Bortie combining nicely to register two goals. Tweed took a new lease of life in the second frame and they too in two goals in rapid succession, Terry and Hall, Hastings being the scorers. The entire third period saw good hockey played with the teams trading shot for shot in a rolling shot that eluded Matthews, put Tweed out in front. Merrette combined with Burtie to equal the score, and in a few minutes Bostnart put his team in the lead. Tweed played fourth man up in the remainder of the game but Woodok Harrison and Merrette proved an unbeatable defense. The game which may yet be played at the Belleville Arena on Saturday night, promises a real good contest.

The line-ups:

Tweed — Goal, Reeves; defence, Smith and Terry; centre, C. Bashelle; wings, Hastings and J. Ryan; Subs. Rashotte, Leal Cotton and Courneyea.

O.S.D. Ramblers — goal, Matthews; defence W Woolck and J. Harrison; centre, Bostnart; wings, Merrette and Burtie Subs. McShane, Cecchini, Sinclair and Richardson.

CURRENT SPORT

Knocks and Boosts

We understand that the local contingent of boxers have decided not to compete in the Golden Glover boxing tournament to be staged in Kingston the latter part of this month owing to the lack of finances. The rooms given by the local members of the Hello'ed it team" could accomplish such a feat.

Things are beginning to take form in the O.H.A. senior hockey league, especially after last night's games. Belleville Maroons are now at the hands of the local green and white clad outfit. As the situation now stands Wednesday and Friday night games must be won by the Belleville outfit in the Belleville entry lest to Cobourg a three-way tie can be the result. On the other hand if the Trenton "Imperials" manages to squeeze out a win over the Wrigley-coached clan from the Hydro town, and the play-off will pass Belleville and Trenton battle it out.

About the only thing that could be said about the Belleville Maroons or at the arena last night was the fact that the "Super-Two" line from Madoc were much too heavy and strong stuff for the Trenton "Imperials" to cope with and the game it started out to be semi-fast affair but soon the Belleville players "mixed it up" a bit the far began to fly and action quickly changed from fast to rough stuff. About the only person to stand between Lou Maroons and victory was Lee Tice.

Local hockey fans are passing up some real smart hockey games in the Belleville arena these days. We are not predicting but it is common knowledge that the Wednesday night's Cobourg at Belleville and Friday night's Trenton vs. Campbellford games will be well worth attending. The injection of two Belleville lad night did much to lessen the rough play. As a matter of fact it might be a good idea to have Referee Lou Lee also refereeing Friday night, especially in the Trenton game.

Bill Gadsby has passed out of the American League, but takes about him will linger for a long time. When Bill was sent by the trip to the junior circuit, Val Pilchuk was substituted. Pilchuk, after Tigers, as was Conor Stanage. The latter clapped a called strike. "To the showers with you," barked Gadsby. "And take that 'vegetable' with you, Lee," he added referring to Pilchuk.

CHIEF'S ROLE LUCKY IN WAR

Maori Garment Worn by Admiral Halsey in Action

(By Thomas T. Champion.)
(Consolidated Press Association.)
LONDON, March 21. — Admiral William F. Halsey, Commander-in-Chief of the American Pacific Fleet, and the Authors Club of a New Zealand publication, "The Weekly Review," by South in action during the World War.

The garment, a kind of kilt made of flax, is worn by the Maori chief, when he was in command of the fighting forces of his race.

The New Zealand weekly pays a tribute to the Dominion. One week after leaving Auckland, the ship was the "first" robe and the "first" feather mat which ever he took the ship into action. Two months later, the ship had had seven wars by his fearless leadership, and the Maori mat had been through it all.

The Maori mat, which Admiral Halsey wore in battle, was a present from Sir Apirana Ngata, native minister of New Zealand, who made the presentation during a visit to the Dominion. Two months later, the ship had had seven wars by his fearless leadership, and the Maori mat had been through it all.

Sir Apirana Ngata, native minister of New Zealand, was fought in the South Pacific. He was the native minister of New Zealand when he presented the mat.

After the garment was bestowed upon the admiral, in August, 1918, the New Zealand freighter Otaki, on which he was serving, was sunk. Again he wore the "first" robe and the "first" feather mat and receiving no damage whatever.

Then he led the fleet to Auckland to honor the captain of the fleet in the Iron Duke and Admiral Jellicoe, by Captain Admiral, Sir John Green, in the Admiral, Sir John Green, in the Admiral, Sir John Green, in the

5 PROVINCES FOR DOMINION

Suggestion is Made by George C. MacDonald of Montreal

Toronto, March 21.—The creation of the Dominion into five provinces, instead of the present nine, with a corresponding reduction in the number of Parliamentary representatives, was suggested before the Canadian Club by George C. MacDonald of Montreal, former chairman of the Dominion Chamber of Commerce, and a previous president of the Montreal Board of Trade.

"It might be conceivable that today the Prime Minister will show the confidence that will apply in the way of reducing the $321,471,000 in Dominion debt obligations that has to be taken care of in a 12-month period, but I doubt if he will be able to do that even with all the help he has been getting in the way of free advice," said Mr. MacDonald in a reference to the national budget coming down today.

WARNER BAXTER AT BELLE IN SMART ROMANTIC COMEDY

Warner Baxter and Miriam Jordan, who made their film debuts in "Six Hours to Live," are together again in "Dangerously Yours," which has its first showing today at the Belle Theatre.

Also prominent in the cast are Herbert Mundin, popular comedian, Florence Eldridge, Frances Hatton, Nella Walker, Will Davidson, Arthur Stuart Hull, Lumsden Hare and Maude Anne.

"Dangerously Yours" was adapted for the talking screen from Paul Harvey Fox's novel by Horace Jackson, screen writer, and "Buddy" De Sylva, "Paris Bound", "Sin Takes a Holiday" and other successful films.

Hardly a resolve around the adventures of Jolly, in the role of James society crook and Miss Jordan as an innocent stooge, who is induced to fix clients jewels from room next to Baxter. The girl sleuth and a clever trap for the thief, who, only to be outwitted and strangulated when he tries to double cross the gang, is the climax. Mundin, as usual, is out to supply a surprising denouement to this fast-moving story.

Frank Tuttle, who directed recent productions were "This is the Night" and "The Big Broadcast," directed "Dangerously Yours."

"Leap Year" is Funny

The second feature offering on the screen of the Belle is the picture of the ever-welcome Tom Walls in the sparkling comedy, "Leap Year."

IL DUCE HAS 10 YEAR PLAN

French Adherence Expected—May Ask Time For Study

Paris, March 21—A treaty, valid for 10 years, is envisaged in Premier Mussolini's peace plan, it was officially announced here. The pact, described as embracing "all nations concerned," would be renewable for a second period of ten years unless denounced a year previous to its termination.

It further implies a right to revise existing peace treaties within the stipulations of the League of Nations convenant. Recognition of Germany's claims to equality is also granted by a disarmament convention to be signed simultaneously with the treaty, and this agreement is understood to be confirmed in the proposals.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Britain and Arthur Henderson, Foreign Affairs, Sir John Simon conferred with Premier Mussolini in Rome over the week-end about international matters. The Mussolini peace plan was not promulgated during the discussions, but the general outlines of the plan were not divulged in Rome.

In a three-hour session last night the French cabinet debated the peace suggestions and decided to defer discussion until Premier Edouard Daladier and Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour.

OUTLAWING WILL BE DELAYED ONE YEAR

Retained Creditors Will Be Protected Under New Act

TORONTO, March 21.—First reading was given in the Legislature yesterday to a Bill introduced by the Charles A. Robertson, North Huron Liberal which provides for another year the period set for collection of debts of Canadians outlawed. The aim of the bill is to allow creditors who are disposed to be lenient to debtors to do so at that time without running the danger of losing their claims through expiration of the six-year period for collection. It would give the Legislature an opportunity of studying the situation in 1934 on the basis of the then-prevailing conditions.

Mr. Robertson pointed out that as the law stands today, creditors have to sue to give further extension when the six years near the end. To prevent because of the danger of the claims being outlawed.

Napanee, March 21.—The barking of a collie dog downstairs aroused the lives of Mrs. Frank George, 3 Sherfield, recently widow, and her three children in an early morning fire as their home near the Grimsville C.N.R. station. Groping her way through smoke down the stairs, they released the dog, and all made their way to safety as flames consumed the house with its contents. A neighbour, Joseph Sweet, broadcast an alarm to the district by telephone, but little could be saved.

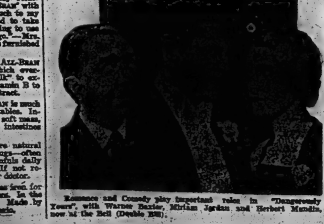
NEW YORK CRITIC IS CHARMED WITH "ROME EXPRESS"

British screen productions have come under the critical eye of dramatic critics in the United States and with varied reason, the growing competition to Hollywood's output of talking and singing picture circles in that country. However, "Rome Express" has secured into the metropolis and unloaded its cargo of thrills and interesting characters on the screen of the Rialto Theatre and the critics has surrendered and admitted that "Rome Express" was a production worthy of any method when their own pet production "Grand Hotel". Brooks Atkinson, in view of the "Rome Express" will speak the Critic's Corner Thursday the following excerpts from an article written by Richard Watts, Jr., in the New York Herald Tribune, February 25, will be a real treat:

"Rome Express" a screen drama made in England by Gaumont-Gainsborough, is distinctly clever, directed by Walter Forde and presented by Universal at the Rialto Theatre, with the following cast:

Ada Merville ..... Esther Ralston
Zorka ..... Conrad Veidt
Tony ..... Hugh Williams
Poole ..... Donald Calthrop
Orde ..... Harry Terry
Grey ..... Harold Huth
Tom Bishop ..... Gordon Harker
Mills ..... Frank Vosper
Alistair Maitland ..... Cedric Hardwicke
Mona Jolliffe ..... Frank Vosper
Spinster ..... Muriel Aked
Lady Maitland ..... Finlay Currie

The English, whose misadventures in cinematography have been numerous once forsook this week with a screen melodrama that is notable for its genuine excellence. The old coldness, lethargy and lack of direction are gone, and in their stead is participate in the British product are speed and the thrills that have been substituted all virtues of warmth, vigor, humor and resourcefulness, that make for a first-rate motion picture. "Rome Express" is an actually clever and so expertly directed by its director that it is hard to become not only a sort of millionaire in English film production but one of the best melodramas shows of the season. Belonging even to the best tradition of the "Shanghai Express" school of the talkies, it has the virtue of being a mere imitation of its predecessors. It is in fact, more of a motion picture than "Grand Hotel" and more effective in story than "Shanghai Express."



The action of course, takes place aboard the famous known express train that runs between Paris and Calais, and this time the thrilling adventures are the result of the baggage containing a stolen Van Dyke, which is being smuggled into Italy. Who's responsible for the arrangement? Are the thief who stole the painting, his two women friends in the Rome Express, who have been double-crossed by him; the chief of the French secret service, a screen star and her officious manager; two gentlemen who look like Scotland Yard detectives, and other entertaining examples of the human race. Of course the plot scheme is to show what happens when these diverse human and dramatic characters are thrown into conflict, and the result is therefore to be a rather complicated melodrama that is so shrewdly directed that it is never for a moment lost its comfort.

The director has been particularly skilful in keeping his plot moving at a full clamour and with the proper element of suspense. Never does the film become tedious to his camera and his drama and has succeeded in drawing splendid performances from all of his actors.

Particularly good, I think, is Gordon Harker, who is enormously amusing as a sort of professional spy, whose action might easily have seemed as tiresome as it is entertaining in the hands of a less capable performer. It is a very real and genuinely comic characterization. Hardwicke is also the head of the French police; Cedric Hardwicke is the suave English philanthropist with a craving for publicity and, I think, is the best villain are especially expert, and Miss Esther Ralston as the American actress gives her best talking picture portrayal as the film star.

CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORES LIMITED

SAFEGUARDING BILL PASSES BY 37 VOTES

Government Authorized to Take Any Action to Keep Peace and Order

Ottawa, March 21—By 37 votes, more than half the members present, the House of Commons last night and the Senate debated as its way to assume for Canada premier dictatorial powers over the President Roosevelt has taken in the United States.

Sixty members, 56 of them Conservatives and two Albert Progressives stood up one by one against 23 Liberals to carry an amendment empowering the government to take any action, whatever it might be, which was deemed necessary to the peace order and good government of the country.

"Chaos and anchy", a phrase feared and detested by even the most disgruntled Canadian, was used by Hon. Ernest Bennett as a warning to the Liberal opposition as what might happen if the administration were refused its requested plenary powers over the "peace, order and good government" of the country.

"I yield nothing to any hon. gentleman in this House in my love for parliamentary institutions," Mr. Bennett declared. "But it is the first duty of the government to prevent chaos and anarchy and chaos and anarchy often arise because there is no adequate authority to cope with the conditions on which chaos and anarchy are predicted."

FORESAKES CHURCH FOR CAREER IN LAW COURT

Pioneer in Producing Dramatic Performances

LONDON, March 21.—(CP)—The Rev. J. H. Newsham-Taylor Vicar of the well-known church or St. Mark's Haunslow, Middlesex, is forsaking the Church for the Law, Mr. Newsham-Taylor has already passed his Law examination, but as he is in Holy Orders he must wait a year until he can be called to the Bar by the Inner Temple.

The income attached to St. Mark's is about 1,000 a year. When Rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, Mr. Newsham-Taylor was a pioneer in producing dramatic performances in the church.

Mr. Newsham-Taylor has ambitions toward entering Parliament. "The scope of the parson," he says, "is too much restricted by the bounds of his parish. I have given 26 years to the Church, and I feel that the time has arrived when the world must be my parish."

Removal of Barriers Hampering Trade Emphasized

Washington, Mar. 22 (AP)—State department officials said today they hoped to secure legislation shortly authorizing the administration to negotiate reciprocal commercial treaties based on individual tariff concessions.

Officials indicated such legislation would be pushed as soon as emergency measures are out of the way.

Officials would not connect the question of reciprocal tariffs with the thing of war debts but the impression prevailed that tariff advantages would be discussed when America's debtors present their claims for revision.

It was made clear at the department that the American Government would emphasize as most important the removal of trade barriers and exchange restrictions hampering the free movement of goods.

Flash of Shooting Stars Which Do Not Touch Earth Reveals Chemical Contents

(By Howard W. Blakeslee)
(Associated Press Science Editor)
Cambridge, Mass., March 22.—The chemical elements that make meteors which never touched the earth were announced today at Harvard Astronomical Observatory.

The momentary flash of light of these shooting stars, 50 to 70 miles overhead, since the used to reveal exactly what the meteors are composed of. The method is an unusual piece of detective work.

It makes possible a study of the streams of dust, stones and millions which fly constantly through space, always dark and invisible, except for the instant when one of them strikes the earth's atmosphere and ends its existence in a bright flash or light. About 100,000,000 of them strike the atmosphere every 24 hours.

The rare meteors revealed their make-up through study of their spectra by means of photographs of their light taken through prisms. The studies were made by Dr. F. M. Millman. They showed that air and possibly, seven of the meteors chemically analyzed contained some iron. Four had in addition some calcium, a main element in bones and teeth. Three carried sodium. The silver-white metal used formerly for photographers flashlights.

Two Million Surplus Sought

OTTAWA, March 22.—(CP)—The Budget presented today by Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister, is generally estimated on the basis of present business conditions, in the hope of a surplus in 1933-34 a surplus of ordinary revenue over ordinary expenditures amounting to $2,000,000.

Revenues for 1933-34, under present taxation, are estimated at $287,000,000.

Ordinary expenditures are estimated at $280,000,000.

The deficiency on ordinary account is to be met by further reductions in controllable expenditures amounting to $14,000,000 and new taxation yielding $70,000,000.

The Budget and the People

(By The Canadian Press)

Agriculture and exporters of primary products today generally praised as an aid to their trades the Dominion budget provision for a sterling standard. Generally the public and many manufacturers hailing sugar revised the tax of two cents a pound on that commodity as a benefit now. Great War veterans heard with apprehension they could no longer count on both disability pensions and pay from government jobs. The Canadian Legion called for a meeting Saturday to consider the situation.

Montreal exporters of bacon and hams, poultry, fresh and canned fish, tobacco, cheese and dairy products, eggs and honey, were cheered by news of the sterling fund which will protect them from loss on every sale of one pound sterling they make in Great Britain hereafter. Should the value of the pound remain below that figure in Canadian funds the government will make good the difference. A Neil McLean executive member of the Maritime division of the Canadian Manufacturers Associa tion said he thought the sterling stabilization should have been applied to other countries with the British monetary system, not Britain which the Hon. Mr. Rhodes has brought down is in the main highly encouraging." Dr. W. W. Swanson of the Department of Economics of the University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon commented:

"The West will welcome the provision in the budget for relating the currency to sterling rather than the Canadian dollar on agricultural products. The arrangement by which Prince with Fletcher up, were last seen standing.

Solenoid put in a strong challenge and passed Varsity Express but the line was reached. Winster was fourth followed by Tourist and Holmwood.

Sandfield and Cloghen, who finished unplaced, were joint favorites.

CHAIN STORE PROPOSAL

Toronto, March 22—(CP)—Tuesday's Legislature session at Queen's-ton today voted down a proposal to tax by a graded levy chain and retail branches of chain organizations having more than five stores in Ontario, but voted to increase the percentage levied on the assessed value of the latter from distributing plants from 25 to 75 per cent.

A GRICULTURE AND STERLING

Government Will Absorb Part of Loss to Agriculture

Ottawa, March 23 (CP)— The announcement that the Government would absorb part of the loss to producers from the drop in the pound sterling in relation to the Canadian dollar was one of the most welcome features of the budget speech, it was declared by many members of the Commons today.

Mr. Bennett declared today that the fund would be established as backing at the immediate session. He prepared and an announcement as to how the fund would be created would likely be made in a day or so, Canada Press reports.

The canning industry should also be greatly helped. One prominent canner in Western Ontario yesterday stated that they could do a good business if they could get the money in exchange. Frequently the vegetable and fruit crops were in the surplus. They contract to buy from the farmers and if the crop was a big, the amount canned is big and the company is in debt. They have been faced with the danger of having to cut out some of the farmers in the following season to reduce the output. This will probably not be necessary if the companies can have a share of the large demands in Britain.

The price Canadian factories will receive for the export of that commodity opens should be increased by the increase in the pound and will not affect butter at present because Canada is not exporting any butter.

Clauses Affected

The stabilization will apply to live cattle shipments, all poultry products all dairy products, all meats including fresh and canned fish, canned vegetables, tobacco, maple products, honey. The object of the fund is to encourage diversified farming.

Col. Long's Death Recalls "Regrettable Incident"

Battle of Colenso in 1899 Caused Much Criticism

SEVEN WON V. C.

(By Thos T. Champion.)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, March 22.—(CP Cable) Death today of Lt.-Col. Charles Long, aged 83, formerly of the Royal Horse Artillery, recalls to South African War Veterans one of those regrettable incidents which, in the early days of the Boer War, aroused much criticism.

That phrase has figured with painful frequency in official despatches. It was employed by Lord Roberts to relieve Ladysmith in 1899, by Lord Kitchener in the long struggle at Colenso, Col. Long was in command of the artillery. Some misunderstanding appears to have arisen between General Buller and Col. Long. When the battle opened Col. Long was severely wounded and General Buller abandoned the attempt to force the passage but gallant efforts were made to retrieve the guns in which no fewer than seven officers and men won the Doregin raced to the finish of the race over the straight mile course in front of Lord Derby, L. Mackieson's Solonoid, who carried 9st 7lbs, and Lord Astor's Gay Time was ridden by Canty. Thing astonished half a length back came H. A. Parvy's Varsity Express, an outsider. The course was heavy and carrying next to bottom weight, 94 pounds, Twenty-eight ran. Betting was 25 to one against Doregin, 10 to one against Solonoid and 30 to one against Gay Time.

It was the 76th renewal of the big handicap, first run in 1853 and worth approximately $10,000.

Heavy Geese

Heavy rains in the past week have drenched the course and for three days prior to the running laborers were busily pumping and ditching to get the course in shape. For a time it seemed probable the big stewards would have to hold the race on the normal course until they would upset the betting but the weather cleared and Wednesday at the straight mile track was whipped into shape.

Doregin had been listed for the handicap but did not run were: Lord Boy, Bantam, Jo Gorse, Lord Marcus and Banner Knight. Lillgaliers ridden by Taylor and Gwyn Prince with Fletcher up, were last seen standing.

Prussia's Union With Austria is Acclaimed at First Meeting of Diet

Hitlerites in Control Jam Through Election of Officers And Committees And Cheer Keynote Speeches

REFUSAL TO FREE SOCIALIST MEMBERS

Last Vestiges of Democratic Rule Wiped Out by Hitler as He Assumes Dictatorial Power And Rule Without Reichstag For 4 Years

BERLIN, March 22 (AP)—Prussia's new Diet acclaimed the policy of political union with Austria at its first meeting this afternoon.

Controlled by Chancellor Hitler's Nazi party, it jammed through the election of officers and committees, cheered keynote speeches by the aged General Karl Litzmann, Speaker pro-tem, and Hans Kirri, who was re-elected Speaker.

The house discarded the old order of business, organized in less than three-quarters of an hour, and declined amid jeers to liberate several Socialist members detained in prisons for political offenses.

The meeting place was draped with the flag of the new order. The galleries were crowded and Prince August Wilhelm occupied a seat in the old royal box.

"It is one of the greatest honors which ever has come to me," General Litzmann said, "to open this Diet in the spirit of the Hitler spring."

Berlin, March 23 (AP)—The first German Reichstag controlled by Adolf Hitler in his political career of 14 years needs tomorrow to hear him outline the government, policy he intends to carry out for four years to come.

Wipe Out Last of Democracy

The Reichstag is expected to move swiftly toward the goal he has set, the complete wiping out of democracy in Germany by ending the own existence for the shortest time on record, as long as he remains Chancellor.

It is almost an absolute certainty that the enabling act drawn up by Hitler, giving himself dictatorial powers for that period, and completely setting aside the present Republican constitution, will be approved.

CAMPBELL FOR TROPHY RACE?

May Race For Harmsworth Cup Against Gar Wood

New York, March 22.—(CP)—Sir Malcolm Campbell, British speed ma, holder of the world's automobile speed record is considering entering the Harmsworth trophy race, fast motor-boating speed test, Commodore Gar Wood at Detroit in September, driving Lord Wakefield's Miss England III, the New York Sun today said it had learned from reliable sources.

The decision may depend on whether Hubert Scott-Paine can complete a speed boat to challenge the British III to challenge Wood's supremacy. Scott-Paine's challenge through Royal Motor Yacht Club on behalf of Campbell the last day for filing. If his boat does not live up to expectations, however, Campbell would be eligible to sent to the substitution of Miss England III with Sir Malcolm at the wheel.

Sir Malcolm has done little motor-boat driving but his knowledge of motors should not make it difficult for him to pick up the knack of piloting the 100-mile an hour speedboat. Gar Wood, who has failed to lift the famous trophy last year, has been working to bring the automobile record for a mile and is believed not to be averse to entering the new field of speed.

LONDON March 22.—(CP Cable)—Sunderland and Middlesbrough played to a scoreless tie in an English League, First Division Soccer match today.

Gall Stones

The principal function of the liver is to make bile. During the process of digestion the bile flows directly into the intestines but when digestion is completed the bile is stored in a little sac placed under the right lobe of the liver called the gall bladder.

In case there should be chronic inflammation of the gall bladder the mineral element in the bile will crystallize and the condition is known as gall stones. Chiropractors by removing the pressure from the nerves that supply the liver relieve the inflammation and these crystallizations are prevented. The unsightly dead trees have been cut down to make room for the younger trees, now mostly maples, that had been crowded out. It was pointed out by the men, however, that trees should not be cut unless their decayed condition warranted it.

EARLY LIFE OF EGYPT TOLD

Rev. Father Baker Special Speaker at Kiwanis Club

Rev. Father Baker, assistant pastor at St. Michael's Church, gave to the Kiwanis Club on Tuesday an interesting talk on Egypt, while Noble Council men were busy serving and provided the boss and all the members present with a fine meal, after which they might add to make a full set of silverware. Rev. Baker was the guest speaker of the club singing two Irish ballads, much appreciated and was as well received as if not a set of tea spoons given by Noble Logan. On Thursday evening the club will entertain their farmer friends at the Belleville Y.M.C.A., which will be the special speaker. Presentations will be made Secretary Bert Jeffs to Peterboro on April 6 and it is expected many of the members will make the journey to the 13th Lock City.

Tuesday night of the day was introduced by George Lee and Kiwanian approached Rev. Father Baker, in Rev. Deacon. Father Baker, in opening his address stated that he had always held a sort of magic to him and that he had been fascinated by the stories he had from it his learned greek truths. He described the early history of the population and area and the amount of knowledge acquired by the early overflowing of the River Nile in periods of the year. He also spoke on the Belleville expedition to Tasmania and the conditions found at that time. The expedition was very unsouth and knowing little of the art of making a home of clothing themselves. He described the conditions with which they were confronted particularly the first hatchet and axe made by the aborigines and the pottery making and the way that the inhabitants burried their dead.

The later life of the Egyptians was told of by the copies of taxes and a system of book-keeping and their method of writing on clay which grew 24 letters of our alphabet. He stated the Egyptian was the first to introduce the calendar, figuring by the moon making the year 360 days and 12 holidays. He told of the dawn of the metal age and the great help it was to them to modern civilization and of the pyramids as their most outstanding monument. In closing the speaker asked what we were leaving for civilization as there were many who believed that the present civilization was passing and that there is coming a Kindness and consideration such as president in Kiwania Club is more of a monument than riches and he wished the club continued success in the work they were doing.

MOTORISTS DRIVE IN MOST CAREFUL MANNER

No Major Car Accidents Reported During Storm.

Not a single major motor car accident was reported by either local traffic officers patrolling the highways out of Belleville during the heavy snow storm which prevailed yesterday and the day previous.

Despite the fact that serious motor accidents were reported both to the east and the west of this district no accidents of any nature, which would require the services of the motorcycle patrol were in evidence on highway No. 2, 14 and 33. Not only was the absence of major motor accidents in evidence over the period of the heavy snow storms but on the previous week end when the roads in this district were covered with glaring sheets of ice, no serious motor accidents were reported in this immediate community.

The absence of major motor accidents during such periods and under the severe driving conditions speaks well of the calibre of drivers in the community. According to information given out by the traffic officers the motorist of today fully realizes the dangers, which confront them under such conditions and drive accordingly.

COL. KEELER IS HONORED

Retiring D. C. of Argyll Given Razor by Sergeants

Belleville regiment the Argyll Light Infantry, have had several well qualified and popular commanding officers but one was more popular than Lt.-Col. R. O. Keeler, whose name is known to all the regiment. To evidence the esteem in which he is held by the various officers and the non-commissioned ranks, he was presented with a beautiful Safety razor. Upon the margin of the case was inscribed the following: "Presented to Lt. Col. R. O. Keeler, M.C., by the W.O. and Sergeants A.L.I., March 1933. The present took place in the Sergeant's Mess at the armouries.

Company-Sergt. Major R. Pister, President of the mess in making the presentation, read the following address:

"It is both a pleasant pat and duty to perform, and when we think that it signifies the loss of a Commanding Officer who has been a gallant and efficient officer whose name we shall all feel, and a pleasure to be able to signify in some small way our feelings for you. We, the Sergeant's Mess, to which you have been so popular, desire to present on behalf of the W.O. and Sergeants I have great pleasure in asking you to accept this token of esteem. In trusting it will give you as good a shave as you have given us goods and the British Empire.

"Before we part, Colonel, I will say a pleasure for him to be present. For five years he had been present with the regiment, which had taken considerable of his time. He had been a keen backbone of the regiment and at all times have given his best to the regiment. We do not know if his written. This has been a very hard task, but that he would be visiting the mess. We hope that the memory of the officers and ranks will be remembered.

At the conclusion of the remarks Colonel Keeler replied in a few words a few appropriate remarks.

Major Lt.-Col. Ponton introduced the retiring commanding officer was the guest of honor, and presented with the Col. Keeler was retiring. We are sorry to lose him, as he was a most efficient officer and carries with him the best wishes of all soldiers from the Argyll Light Infantry. We hope he will carry on and do the best

During the evening selections were rendered by the orchestra, by James Clarke who is a member of the Belleville band, a member who, the regiment. Light refreshments were served and thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The only toast proposed was that "God Save the King" which the National Anthem was sung.

Outstanding British Film Shown in City

"Rome Express" Which is Praised Everywhere Comes to Capitol

Belleville is indeed fortunate in possessing such keenly managed theatres to cater to the taste for high class moving picture entertainment. It is a common occurrence for Belleville beaus to receive pictures either before or concurrent with the best theatres of Toronto.

An example is to hand this week when the outstanding British film "Rome Express" is to be shown at the Capitol theatre.

The "ROME EXPRESS" commences a three day run at the Capitol today (Thursday) and a fine line-up of the entertainment values of this picture can be obtained by the review by Ray Lewis, editress of the Canadian Moving Picture Digest, published in Toronto.

Miss Lewis writes:

One is not obliged to think too hard in "Rome Express", all you have to do is get on the train and ride along with the other passengers, but there is a reason, an interesting that you are in Rome before you realize that everything that could happen to anyone, anywhere, happens on the "Rome Express". It is an entertaining adventure, which gives the Edgar Wallace thrillers and the Siegfried Romance a decided competition. Curiously, I quite forgot that I was looking at a British film. I cannot explain just why I felt that way, unless it was because the Hungarian director has the same sense of production perfection; and never going so swiftly through its melodramatic climaxes that one forgot where it was made, other than that it was very well done! Conrad Veidt does excellent work. Throughout the cast is thoroughly good and lends toward a perfect presentation. Walter Forde has succeeded in directing one of the best British-produced pictures I have yet had. Here is a British picture that can play anywhere, anywhere and which will entertain anyone.

MARCH STILL HAS JITTERS

Peak of March Storm is Reached in This District

March with the jitters still continued to hold the centre of the stage in the day's news, and the weather was the topic in this district.

On the second day of Spring we find:

Citizens plowing to work through snow drifts from four to eight inches in height.

Robins in exciting cadences of the robin and the chatter of flocks of sparrows, and the shrill voice of chimney sweeps calling for customers to clean out soot.

Blacksmiths reporting business booming in shoeing mules in horseshoes and reshoeing the horses that have rough nails and ice-balls.

Thirty-one extra men being hired by the city department of public works to clear the streets of a foot of snow, and sand the glazed and slippery hills, and the intersections.

Men on roof of downtown buildings, tied with ropes to the chimneys plowing, the heavy covering of the flat roofs of the stores and factories.

Merchants holding snow-shovel, rubber and galosh sales, and reporting business good.

A few cars in and out of the ditch on highways east and west of the city.

Snow falling only from a point a half mile or more above the horizon, centering the heavies around Belleville, the vapors off to the north. West of Trenton the roads are bare.

Mr. Moira River plugged with another ice, and boat owners at the Bay of Quinte in a state of waiting ready to knock the ants from under them and sliding them back into the water, as soon as the day.

Temperatures steadily rising, and local weather prophets still repeating "Rain before sunshine "just around the corner."

DRINK CANNED HEAT COOL OFF IN CELLS

George Robinson and William Collins, transients, appeared in the local county police court, after being arrested by Constable Wicket in Stirling on Tuesday night on a charge of intoxication, and were found guilty by Magistrate Mikel and fined the usual amount or in default of payment, five days in the common jail at hard labor. They took the jail term.

Constable Wicket alleged that he had previously informed the two men to leave the village of Stirling as they were becoming a public nuisance, and that he found them lying prone on behalf of himself and his fellow officers stating that he had been providing the food for them in the cells. He told the court that a third party had supplied the rubbing alcohol and canned heat, which the officer alleged they had been consuming. Constable Wicket, accordingly, stated that the men had become intoxicated and were shouting on the streets causing a disturbance.

MOTORISTS ARE HOPEFUL

Expectation Highways Department May Make Change

While nothing definite or official has been learned or given out is to be assumed probability that the matter of a change in the time of the opening of the Bridge Houses in this province will be given consideration by the Honorable Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Public Highways, following the representations of the local lessee of licenses, Mr. G. H. Ketcheson, to draw attention to the fact of a change.

From an unofficial referendum of motorist owners of this district it was learned that the greatest ministry of them favor a change in time of leaving licenses, from the first of the year as at present to nine time in April or May.

Suggested dates for applying for operator's licenses, for licenses and those for passenger cars was the first of April.

At present, it is pointed out, the number of cars issued so far this year constitute only about one-thirds of the total. Extended days are given granting the department since the first of the year has been mainly responsible for the sales, but the fact that the weather has not been favorable to car operation has also mitigated against the sales.

In 1932, at the end of February, nearly all licensing received in the local had been issued.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS RECEIVE $1 AWARDS FROM SALADA MAN

Wonders will never cease and truth is stranger than fiction and all that, but the latest was in the line of the surprise would call at the homes in Belleville and give the lucky honest-to-goodness dollar bills free from the mint or the press or wherever they are grown. It would have sounded like a Baron Munchausen tale—but you just wait, Mister Reader, truth it'tell s strange young lady who called and good looking arrived in the city Monday and immediately began to make their one-dollar bills. He continued the pleasing work Tuesday, and will remain in Belleville throughout the week. The home visitation is in the interest of Salada Tea, the dollar bills remaining in the homes where the housewife is to get up brain and ride along with the other passengers, but it appears, is interesting that you are in Rome before you realize that everything that could happen to anyone, anywhere, happens on the "Rome Express". It is an entertaining adventure, which gives the Edgar Wallace thrillers and the Siegfried Romance a decided competition. Curiously, I quite forgot that I was looking at a British film. Taken for a Ride!

By Q. George Thigs

I had been working at the Oyler Advertising Agency only a short time when I decided to "ease off" a bit and take things "kinda" easy. I had noticed that one Thelma Meade gave being kidded plenty and it is a great big way about something. Just about the time I was getting the office hang passed her desk, he'd make a note like a miniature police siren. Maybe it was an imitation of a fire truck going places. Anyway, you always knew when Thelma was about the big idea of the imitations were. Thelma's idea of a good time was a swell row over. We were all in a big long room with a row of desks and a row of correspondents and copy writers alternating.

It was unexpected. (I still am) I don't care if I don't get a promotion during the depression—what I want to do is to hold my job and don't we all? My slenderpaper — during my rest rooms his niece, Mrs. Willie Fox and family.

"Won't the City Hospital do, Miss? It's closer," said the driver.

"Mercy Hospital. Step on it!" Now thought he was trying to be funny.

A couple of green traffic light against him. He didn't stop but took off right through the cross traffic, disregarding red lights as though he were colorblind, and he had made three of them when the cop at that corner saw him already. DE ANGELIS, ACTOR DIES AT AGE 74

Orange, N.J., March 22.—Jefferson de Angelis, 74, celebrated actor, died from a prolonged illness.

De Angelis played more than 100 leading roles and innumerable characters during his long career on the stage. Although his career reached its zenith in the 90's, when he was an internationally known comedian, he received the plaudits years ago with his role as three in Hoyt's A Trip to Chinatown.

He made his debut as a boy of 16 with his sister as La Petite Sally at the old Ocean Theatre, "Variety," Jersey City, before the 21st birthday he had his own company of comedians on the road in Australia.

He found Australians eager to see Uncle Tom's Cabin, so he scrapped his original play and put on Uncle Tom from memory. It was a huge success. Later he ran across a manuscript of the famous slave play and revised his lines to fit. The play failed.

RAISING NEW TAXES

The new federal budget means pulling in the belt for private citizen and corporations alike. Seventy million dollars of new taxation is to be raised this year, according to the estimates of the Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance. Something drastic in the way of changes was expected in view of the deficit of the past year and the country is accordingly not disappointed. Ottawa is going to try to accomplish what many individuals have failed to do without relief aid, and what municipal governments have come to look upon as absolutely necessary—make both ends meet.

Fall in revenue is given as the chief cause for the deficit of the past year. The income slump, of course, was natural with falling salaries and was not unexpected. As the government expenditure was not lessened, new ways of making up the difference are necessary and they are now before the people. The government, however, does not intend to make up this deficit in one year but will spread it over a number of years because with falling revenue, to make the budget balance even without paying off the deficit will be almost task enough.

Government services will have to bear a part of the cost of the new taxation.

Income taxation has been raised in a drastic manner and many who have never before paid income taxes will next month appear at the income tax office desks to contribute their share of the new burden. Higher incomes are given an extra load to carry.

What view will the householder, who is practically every one in Canada either directly or as a smaller member of the family, take of the new excise tax of two cents a pound on sugar? Sugar, of course, is fitting as compared with what it used to be when people paid without grumbling, but they have become used to cheap sugar and there will, no doubt, be considerable lamenting of the impost.

Interest attaches to the new Agricultural Stabilization Fund which is a concession to farmers and fishermen. Indirect benefits are supposed to remunerate the taxpaying public for the cost.

The new budget brings to light as do budgets of every government and every municipality the staggering cost of administration. The cost is being driven home as the screws tighten on the taxpayer.

The reaction to the new budget will be interesting to follow.

But in speech of the Minister of Finance is not gloomy. He sees the brightest hopes in the economic conditions of the world wherein events are moving with great speed, especially in the past few months. He foresees the possibilities of many of the hopes, anxieties and fears of nations and looks to arrangements which will lead to stabilization and a firming of prices to wheat and to begin the era of economic recovery. His reference to the stability of the banks of Canada and to the intention of Canada to put her investments in bond issues is interesting and cheering. The ability to pay which he finds Canadians possess will lead in the long run to the item which will ring the removal of so many imposts.

When recovery comes much work is to be done. That is evident everywhere—in the mind of legislators' business men and in The long list of bills submitted at the last four years cannot be removed by a waft of the hand, but must be made up by work.

CENSORING THE NEWS

That an iron censorship is now in force in Germany, worse than anything known since wartime, is admitted officially at Berlin. Some newspapers have been suppressed outright. Others are published only under the strictest surveillance. Foreign correspondents are required to submit their dispatches to the censor. Nothing is regarded as reflecting upon the government is permitted to pass. Such a repressive system in line with other parts of the Hitler method. But it is a mistaken, even a foolish, system. The aim is apparently to implant impressions abroad about what is going on in Germany. But in the very act those impressions are made still more unpleasant. Rumor and unfounded reports are made to take the place of ascertained facts. Refugees flee across the border and tell harrowing stories which there is no way of testing or contradicting. Where so great an effort is made by a Government to conceal, it is generally felt that there is a great deal to conceal are always roused. Thus the rigid censorship defeats its own purpose. It causes the world to fear that the state of affairs covered up may be even worse than it really is. That has been the almost universal experience with the censorship of the news. It is always ineffective in the long run, and is marked by stupidity from the very beginning. The wonder is how the German Government can expect the highly educated German people to put up with it.—New York Times.

From California comes the news that D. L. Feathers has a bird store in Oakland, and E. B. Fox a fur shop. While up in Portland, Oregon, Neer and Farr have a trucking business.

BARLEY-BREE TALK AROUSES INTEREST HERE

Old Days in Barley Fields And Harvests Are Recalled

The open spigot of the beer barrel in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Detroit will have a direct bearing on the farm homesteads in Madoc, Marmora, Thurlow and the settled townships of the County of Prince Edward, they say.

How is it explained?

It has long been known that this district has turned out the world in the quality or barley grown within her confines. Nowhere else will the sun-ripened heads be so thick, so meaty and solid as those which ripening from the hill and Hastings County, particularly. And for good beer, one demands barley. Therefore the best.

Barley is bound to rise in price. Seed and feed dealers in the city spoke in highly optimistic vein when questioned about it this week.

"No actual jump in the price yet" they say, "but it probably will go up."

More to be Sown

Farmers are buying it in greater quantities, too, and many farmers are preparing the land to plant and seed it to barley. Perhaps by the time the crop matures there will be getting far more for it than they have been getting for the past few years when on many farms the land was turned to other crops more unprofitable.

Old Barley Days

You talk with any of the farmers in the older districts for a few hours of the days that were, when barley was the big crop and the question couldn't get enough of it at one dollar a bushel.

Talk to him of the time when solid lines of wagons and big, chunky, well-groomed horses stood at the side or the road right from the Upper Gilead Church to Ben Dean's elevator at the docks, waiting to unload their precious freight, and the time when it was hard to get enough of it at more than a dollar a bushel, and even went to a dollar and a quarter and thereabouts during some of the years, when the bidders fought for the privilege of purchasing it, and you'll find it takes boats that steamed majestically up the river from the lake's mouth, nose out of the water, holds empty, calling at the city to get their cargo of the prize grain, and when a ship or crew, there was wonderful consternation for height of the sea sucked up by the spout, and the violence of the accompanying whirlwind."

ELECTRIC CLOCK WITHOUT A DIAL

A new type of electric clock eliminates dials and hands and substitutes large numerals visible through small windows in the front plate.

"It may run," they venture. "We may see the dollar barley again—seems very probable that we will. Whether it will go to a dollar and a half I don't know, but I think maybe it will take a year or more to get to that point."

That's the feeling of the farmers with whom we have talked. It is optimistic outlook at least.

This month's issue of "When the beer wagons start rolling again," with their quota of sturdy trotters and their jingling harness, redolents of beer fabrics in every block in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Detroit, and when a million spirited horses step from their stalls and forth their stream of amber colored fluid into the old time schooners, is the good news which has emanated from the beer barley growers.

And as the days pass, as any local farmer will tell you, one must come to Hastings County for it.

LIVER MOST MARVELLOUS HUMAN ORGAN

Most Important Chemical Factory in Human System

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

The liver, the largest organ in the body, is situated under the ribs on the right side and in front. A small part of it actually lies over on the left. Its lowest edge does not project beyond the lower border of the lowest rib on the right.

Since the liver is such an important organ, as well as being so large, it is not astonishing that it should be subject to many disorders.

It measures from ten to twelve inches from side to side, six or seven inches from front to back, and it is three inches thick. Its weight is from three to four pounds, and this entire mass is divided up into five parts, or lobes, which are held in place by five stout ligaments.

How is it explained?

It has long been known that this district has turned out the world in the quality or barley grown within her confines. Nowhere else will the sun-ripened heads be so thick, so meaty and solid as those which ripening from the hill and Hastings County, particularly. And for good beer, one demands barley. Little Benny's Note Book

This afternoon some man was going around ringing doorbells and giving away little sample boxes of baking powder, and she said to him, she says Maybe such got the sample he had here at our house and what we had more, and I said. Well O, it's just go up to him and ask him for a sample, all he's appose to do is to give them out and maybe he's a good natured guy, and does not care who he gives them to as long as he's doing his duty.

So she went up to him and asked him for a sample and he said, Sure, why not, sure.

And he gave each one and kept on ringing doorbells, the saying to Uncle Ray, I got them, let's run around the block and some how the other way with our caps pulled aesy down for a disguise in case he sees again and maybe he'll think we're 2 other fellows and give us each another one. He probably aint so many people he proberly cant hardly tell them apart anyway, I said.

And we ran around the block all our side and went going eh to the man with our caps pulled all ways down to the end of our noses, Glasses saying, O, mister, what's you gives out, will you give us one please?

Saying it with his voice disguised the same as Gladys and I have used thrust, and the man said, That's what they're for, sure, and he gave us each another one, and Glasses said, Gee, that's easy, O, Gladys, let's try it again with you wearing my glasses and me wearing your overcoat.

Which we did running around the block and the other way and so almost bumping into trees and things on account of Glasses' glasses making me see worse instead of better, and when I like him aged as he said, All rite but this is the last time, I'm glad to get rid of them things but there's a thing.

Proving he had say through our disguise that he knew us and he run down on to orchtone to get our birth back and didn't try it any more.

LOOKING BACKWARD
GLEANINGS FROM OUR FILES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO
March 22, 1913.

Belleville and vicinity yesterday was in the grip of one of the worst gales that has swept the district for years. The storm soon until late at night the wind howled blowing at a tremendous rate. The south end of the roof on Holloway Street Church was blown several feet—temporary, repairs were made. Many brick chimneys and sighs were blown down and flake of trees were broken off...A break occurred in the electric line in West Belleville and that portion of the city was without light. A large maple tree in front of the D. and D. Institute grounds was blown down, breaking the fence upon which it fell. In the fifth concession of Sidney a barn on the farm of the late Levi Massey was levelled by the wind and although a number of cattle were in the barn at the time they were not injured. Another barn on the same farm was uncocked and the roof carried off. Along Bellamy Poles, trees and fences were levelled along country roads. Some damage was done in Queen Victoria High School and other slight damage done to the building.

A correspondent says "It now transpires that the manager for lacrosse players at St. Paul Minn., is Dr. Harry Burdette, a well known Canadian, formerly of Belleville, who enjoys one of the most lucrative practices in St. Paul. Dr. Burdette and Bert in Ontario had fall to see some of the big matches and it is said that he proved a host to some of the very outstanding players to go west and play with St. Paul this year. Dr. Burdette, who is over forty-five years of age, plays goal himself."

INSIDE A WATERSPOUT

The passage of a waterspout over a ship has not often been reported.

The British clipper-ship Crest of the Wave had this experience in the Mediterranean in August, 1855. One of her junior officers described the episode in the magzine Leisure Hour, as follows, says Charles Pittsburgh Talman in his Science Service features Why the Weather? (Washington):

"The spout did not rake us fore and aft, but zigzagged across the ship, passing athwart the forecastle, then back over amidship, and a final track along the poop, passing right over me as I stooped to clear the mizzen topsail halyards. For a few moments my sensation was that of being drenched with the spray and water, not in the least that of being crushed to the deck by a heavy volume of water. Shaking myself at the side or the road right from the Upper Gilead Church to Ben Dean's elevator at the docks, waiting to unload their precious freight, and the time when it was hard to get enough of it at more than a dollar and a quarter, and even went to a dollar and a quarter and thereabouts during some of the years, when the bidders fought for the privilege of purchasing it, and you'll find it takes boats that steamed majestically up the river from the lake's mouth, nose out of the water, holds empty, calling at the city to get their cargo of the prize grain, and when a ship or crew, there was wonderful consternation for height of the sea sucked up by the spout, and the violence of the accompanying whirlwind."

ELECTRIC CLOCK WITHOUT A DIAL

A new type of electric clock eliminates dials and hands and substitutes large numerals visible through small windows in the front plate.

"It may run," they venture. "We may see the dollar barley again—seems very probable that we will. Whether it will go to a dollar and a half I don't know, but I think maybe it will take a year or more to get to that point."

That's the feeling of the farmers with whom we have talked. It is optimistic outlook at least.

This month's issue of "When the beer wagons start rolling again," with their quota of sturdy trotters and their jingling harness, redolents of beer fabrics in every block in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Detroit, and when a million spirited horses step from their stalls and forth their stream of amber colored fluid into the old time schooners, is the good news which has emanated from the beer barley growers.

And as the days pass, as any local farmer will tell you, one must come to Hastings County for it.

"It is expected the new clock will find many applications. Among those will be the timing of long-distance telephone calls. Surgeons in operating rooms, where the matter of seconds is vitally important, will find it show a elapsed time accurately. It is possible to install the clock in a radio cabinet in such a manner that it would automatically turn or stop the radio at any desired time. In railroad stations this clock would give the time as it is listed in railroad time-tables. It should also prove a convenient timepiece for small children who experience trouble in telling time from ordinary clocks."

W. J. "Peeney" Mills Named Manager of the Nationals

Noted "Catcher" of Ball Club For Past 13 Years

ACCEPTS POSITION

W. J. "Peeney" Mills, veteran catcher and popular official of the Ville Nationals Baseball Club in the O.B.J. for some 13 consecutive years, was appointed manager of the club, for the coming baseball season of 1933 by President Walter Gerow, at a meeting of the executive held their weekly meeting last evening.

"Peeney" Mills assumes the helm of the local Nationals after carrying the brunt of the team's work on the field for the past 13 seasons during which time he has served under various managers but finally on the retirement of Walter Gerow, as manager of the locals, whose place he takes in the line-up of Belleville baseball following the departure of Gerow to Napanee last fall, the National's executive carefully considered various applicants for the position and when unanimous in their choice owing to his success in past years "Peeney" Mills was offered the post of baseball king and well in Belleville and the district, it is safe to say comes to the helm of the Nats no stranger and a tried and proven baseball general.

Once previously, in 1927 when the veteran returned back from Senior O.B.A.A. to intermediate ranks for one season, he was appointed manager, a duty which he performed in a fashion befitting to that occasion, "Peeney" Mills started his senior baseball career, when but 16 years of age, he played with the old Ontarios before the days of the "Tri City" league, he referred to by every rook and corner in the province as the Ontarios were the real cream of baseball circles. As a catcher, a position he filled until he laid off the load for infield service with the Ontarios in 1914, when he played with them in the old Senior O.B.A. League. From 1915 to 1918 he served his country in the Great War and was in the Great War with the 32nd Battery during which time he played baseball for the Canadians against all and sundry, returning from the other side of the Allied forces. Mills returned to his home in Belleville in 1919 immediately on the war and joined the old Grand Trunks" baseball team, the forerunner team in the then newly formed O. B. A. A., under the jurisdiction of the O.B.A.A. in 1919, when the Trunks won the C.O.B.L. decision over the junior champs of Toronto in one of the most hectic series ever witnessed in Belleville, which went on to win the provincial title, Hayden and Hall were the battery, such old familiar faces as Freddie Gower, Walter Gerow, Wm. "Bill" Meagher, Joe Kelleher and other veteran Belleville players.

Three pennants in Row.

In 1922, '23, and '24 the Belleville club won the C.O.B.L. with Mills as his capable and efficient catcher the bat. Again in '26, '28 and '30 the Nationals took charge of the O.B.J. their loop only to win the provincial title from Woodstock in 1926, Belleville has always been recognized as the hot-bed of baseball in the east country and Mills' name has been heralded as the best catcher and baseball general in Eastern Canada. In 1930 he was considered good enough to be chosen as the catcher of the all-star baseball team in the old Michigan-Ontario loop, a league which included such teams as Windsor, Chatham, Walkerville, Kitchener, Niagara Falls, Stratford and other major league ball players of today. Not only is the catcher of the old local baseball club take great pleasure in naming "Peeney" Mills as the 1933 pilot of the Belleville Nationals but the citizens of Belleville wish him the best of luck for a successful position with open arms, while the baseball fans in general will undoubtedly be received with favour all over the province where he will direct the game of amateur baseball so long and so well.

Mills has always been a friend of baseball all his life and no better baseball general exists in Ontario. He understands the game from every conceivable angle and he has always been referred to as the best developer of young players in Ontario. "Peeney" will lined by all, who have had the privilege of coming in contact with him, and more especially with his team mates, of whom he is now in charge. He was always referred to as a fighting ball player and never quit on the field of the game and naturally he will endeavour to inject that spirit of "never-say-die" into his 1933 players, the slogan which has made "Peeney" Mills Ontario's premier ball player.

CRUCIAL GAME IS ON CARD

Cobourg Must Win to Stay in The Running

When the Belleville Cities Service Nine take to the ice against the Cobourg "All-Stars" tonight in the crucial game of the group "A" schedule of the Eastern and District Hockey League will naturally be in progress, as both teams practically face elimination in defeat. Following their stellar victory over the Campbellford Maroons on Monday night, the green and white are slight favorites over the Cobourgites, who incidentally have yet to register in the win column of the local post-season loop.

With two ex-Belleville hockey players, Simms and Gerald Rihler, performing for Max Geraldi's packsters, the game promises a more interesting struggle. It quite naturally the Rihler boys will be out to display their local hockey wares against their old team mates. The locals were also strengthed by the acquisition of Alex Weir for Monday night's tilt and his two goals while in action on the ice helped sends "Red Ink" Wells' Cobourg aggregation down to defeat by a 4 to 3 score.

Weir, who was a former Belleville star, is also well known to the fans of Toronto in the league championship series in the first game of the series with the aid of Vic Ripley and Eddie Shore then Orts Hennessy added another goal to Owen's pass before the first period ended.

Pete Siebert and Murray Munro each contributed for a Kenora goal in the second period before Smith and Shore duplicated the scoring with Sat of Shore and Nels Stewart. Art Somers cut into the Bruins lead early in the early part of the third period, when he combined with Chuck Conacher and Bill Keeling to beat Tiny Thompson!

Amerks Down Frum Rebels

Amateur hockey fans were behind twice to vanquish Hamilton Rebels who failed to be the first Americans in New York this season, Bill Regan's second period goal in the first minute of the game and Bruce Howes won the game in the first minute of the third period, when he added the second goal of the night on a pass from Dolph Hughes.

Toronto did all their scoring in the first period, Harvey Jackson wiggled through for a goal in the opening minute of play, Primeau added the second, with the assistance of Johnny Sheppard and George Patterson and Hooley Smith scored the third goal for the first time that lasted Ken Doraty added the fourth and Hal Oolton a goal-making pass, Primeau scored the fifth on Jackson's pass for the Leafy third goal.

Eddie Shore, assisted by Mc Kinnon's supporters with three-goal second period attack Cooney Weiland and Conacher on the way down and gave Glen Shields a pass for the first goal and scored the second himself. Benny Cox was the other Ottawa marksman on a play started by Earl Roche Maroons failed to beat Billy Brownlee as the youthful goalkeeper scored his fifth shutout of the season.

Maple Leafs and Boston Bruins to Battle for N. H. L. Title First Playoff Game Saturday

Bruins Tie Detroit For Honors But Have Better Goal Average

LEAFS LOSE

Win Section, When Ottawa Defeats Maroons by 3-0

Toronto, March 22 (CP)— Boston Bruins battle Toronto for the National League American Division championship for the fifth time in six years, as they wound up their season's schedule tied with Detroit, in points but ahead of the Red Wings in goal average.

Boston's 6 to 3 victory over New York Rangers last night gave them first place and the right to play Toronto in the league championship series and the Leafs, Stanley Cup holders had Canadian Pacific first place honors three years ago.

Detroit outscrambled 3 to 2 to Ottawa in the Senators' last game of the season.

Toronto lost their game with Montreal 4 to 3.

Alex Smith's pair of goals was the deciding setup in Rangers defeat at Boston. The raw-boned defenceman whipped in the first goal of the night with the aid of Vic Ripley and Eddie Shore then Orts Hennessy added another goal to Owen's pass before the first period ended.

Pete Siebert and Murray Munro each contributed for a Kenora goal in the second period before Smith and Shore duplicated the scoring with Sat of Shore and Nels Stewart. N. Y. GIANTS LOOK GOOD

Not Quiet Satisfied With Array of Hurling Talent

By PAUL ZIMMERMAN
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Los Angeles, Calif., Mar. 22.—With their defensive fences in good repair new pennants on the pitching hillside the New York Giants look to the 1933 National League pennant race with a feeling that last year's sad story will not be retold.

Manager Bill Terry has built up a sturdy reserve mindful of the injuries which either messed up things in 1931 and 1932. The infield appears especially strong. Travis (Stonewall) Jackson has been more active than ever at shortstop since his legs were overhauled during the winter. Hughie Critz' confidence in his code ailing arm has been restored and Johnny Vergez has improved his work at third and at the plate.

Terry completes what he is willing to call at any time the best infield in the league. He has been clubbing the ball at a pace which promises another year like that of last season when he hit .355.

Terry figured he had too many games behind the plate in 1932, but decided this won't happen again, with Gus Mancuso, a peppery little catcher with a fine throwing arm and lots of power in his bitting, and Phil Richards, purchased from Indianapolis of the American Association, to carry most of the burden. George Davis, who hit .308 in last year with the Phillies the last time is the most important addition to the outfield.

HAMILTON PATS SCORE A SURPRISE VICTORY

Defeat Niagara Falls 2-0 in First Game at Play-downs.

Hamilton, Mar. 23 (CP)—Genial Gene Fraser, Alex "Nipper" Wilson and Oliver Spaulding, all starters were recovering today from the surprising Hamilton Tigers' victory in Hockey Association "B" championship race there when they slipped a 2-0 decision over the senior Cataracts last night in the first of their two-game total-point series for the Allan Cup play-downs.

The return game is scheduled for the Falls Thursday, the ultimate winner to enter the next round against Ottawa Rideaus, the first game of which will take place at Toronto Saturday.

An incessant offensive, with never a let-up, rewarded Pat Egan's Tigers in the second session and another in the third, while at the same time Bobby Anderson was performing in brilliant style between the uprights to hold the opposition scoreless.

The Steady plugging by George Hedding's pupils upset Cataracts and their combination suffered as a result. George Hastie, stickhandling wizard, was the only Falls player to penetrate the Hamilton rear guard with any success, his team mates finding it tough task to clear the leech-like checking of the homesters.

LUCKY STRIKES HIT MAPLES HARD

Defeat Bank of Montreal in Playoff For Winter Loop Title

Hitting the maples at a terrific clip, the Lucky Strikes, a team composed of girls in the winter league playoffs from the Bank of Montreal on Tuesday night at the Recreation Alleys and qualified to meet the Ontario Intelligencer team, winners of the fall loop, for the junior championship and trophy. This game will likely be played next week.

The girls hit the maples consistently all night and some good scores were recorded. R. Stringer was high for both teams with an even 760 for the three strings, a big game followed by "Mac" Keller-her with 668, Florence Walden was third high for her team with 647 and "Peg" Burke was next in line with 636. The single high game for the evening was rolled by Florence Walden with a 305 count and closely followed by Stringer with 304. The girls have had fine success in the league and are a tough team to take and the roll-off for the championship will be one of the high spots of the winter sport. The Lucky Strike girls will get revenge for the defeat handed to them in the "Printers" in the fall playoff but the "Tek Slingers" are going to a few practices' quietly and may have something to say about the championship will rest. Fashion Flashes

(By Alice Alden)

The "mixed-material" vogue is upheld in the satorial world judging by many new models. There's a navy blue jersey frock of white silk piqué, studded at intervals with gunmetal metal nailheads. It is worn with a deep kerchief collar of white piqué back and front, the entirety of the collar nailheaded, and edged with a matching-pleated ribbon of white grosgrain.

Smart and new, is an evening wrap of white velvet. The cape-back is straight and has an opening for one hand. A deep collar wrapper is round the figure, after it is draped over the other shoulder.

Always in demand is the black tulle frock. A most attractive new model has cartridge pleats of the material on the front of the skirt at armholes. The outside of each pleat is overlaid with black velvet.

A grand scheme is that of black with pink. A black net frock has the deep décolleté edged all around with stitched bands of pink velvet. This is worn with a wrap with cape sleeves of pink velvet, trimmed with black fox.

A new link in the chain of the ensemble fashion is the contrast of one color in different fabrics. Thus a long coat or brown twill and beige dress, a dress of black satin and one of matching velvet. The coat is worn over a street dress of the contrasting twill silk, thus giving three different fabrics in the same color.

Other attractions fall to dim the charm of hem. An exquisite velvet frock done on long, slender lines with a train is finished with a deep fold of self leaf pattern. Down the back there is a heavy accumulation of knife lace, laid in applique that helps to create teh clinging line of the train.

THE SHOWER

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My sister married quietly and I hardly knew about it. I should like to give her proper thing for me to give a shower for her. I have not met her living at her home. Could say it is not the right thing to do? when it is for my own sister.

Thank you.

What you say that "some of the best people know about the giving of showers." That is the opportunity for a close relative of bride-to-be, and certainly of the bride, to give such a party. When the mother or a friend of the bride-to-be gives a shower for her, it does give quite a distinct impression of being a "bought party" — and when such a party is given for a bride, I think that it gives even more this impression. Don't you?

However, of course there isn't any definite rule about this, and each one must be made for herself the judgment of its appropriateness.

AT A DINNER

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

May I thank you for your helpful column?

We are attending a dinner in March (host and I would like very much not to make any mistake. Would you be kind as to tell me what to do with my lingerneath? I should at the regular things but...

It's only the "regular things" that I could tell you about, dear lady. Those are the things the afternoon hats are placed at table in the order in which they are placed.....unless you know that the waiter who places them did so in the irregular order in which they are placed when placed in hotel restaurants, and as we do often find them placed in homes. They should, of course, be placed in the order of their occupation at the courses and so that we may have the cards on the farthest from the plate and use them in order toward the plate. But it makes us see all wrong. Perhaps you can best use your judgment as to which is the method is most appropriate for each course.

INTRODUCTION

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

In your column the other day you said—"And, by the way, the gentleman mentioned should be duly distinguished, is introduced to the woman. Not the woman to the man." Will you please tell me whose name should be mentioned first?

Dumb Dora.

Introduction first in the introduction, the name of the woman: "Miss Allen, may I present Mr. Graham" or, "Mrs. Allen, Mr. Graham."

AT AN HOTEL

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I wonder if you will be so kind as to help me out.

I....I am going to attend a convention in May. It is to be in Winnipeg and I shall be staying at a hotel. I am thinking to be on the rock way of ordering a taxicab from the hotel. Would you please be so kind as to tell me what I expect and so forth?

After leaving the concert, how do I arrange to return to the hotel?

The most convenient and safest thing for you to do is to ask at the hotel desk about making arrangements for a taxicab to take you to the concert and to have the taxi driver call for you after the concert. The desk is the proper place to find to make any arrangement of this kind for you during your stay.

THE BRIDE'S CHOICE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am intending to get married soon, my father is dead. My mother says it is proper to have my grandfather—my father's father—give me in marriage. I don't think he could; till this place very well. Could it be for one of my father's brothers or mother's brothers? I have no brothers-in-law, only one brother-in-law. Who do you think is proper?

B.

It is for you the bride, to choose the one whom you would prefer to have present and to give you away. If you would prefer to have an uncle present and not your father, it is appropriate to do this. You probably have a favorite uncle who would like to have you ask him to do this. It is just as much a part of the duty of your uncle give you in marriage as it is for you to have your grandfather do this.

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions that would be of interest to publish by readers.)

Beauty .... By Helen Jameson

Job Hunter is Judged By Her Clothes

With job hunting a fairly general diversion, it concerned to this chronicler of beauty news that it might be worth while to find out what type of girls the big bosses are looking for. The manager of an old, established employment agency ought to know something about it often find them placed in service. They should, of course, be placed in the offices of corruption to the comess and so that we may have the cards on the farthest from the plate and use them in order toward the plate. But it makes us see all wrong. Perhaps you can best use your judgment as to which is the method is most appropriate for each course.

The boss will size her up as being frivolous, lacking efficiency. Of course, we know the rule doesn't hold good. The most intelligent lit town may have a strong contempt for gum, can use much polish, and that's the way the subject boils up in the employer's mind.

A neat cold me once never to wear fluffy hat, a gift who wore satin slippers or spiked heels. He says that no sensible woman would go out in all kinds of weather in wear fragile shoes. And that, as his office floors aren't scrubbed, they can't stand the click-clack of high heels. If that's what he thinks, chances are many other men have the same ideas.

A man doesn't want a woman employee who looks spacey; hence her doesn't speak well for his taste or his judgment, she continued, "He thinks she'll be flirting with the men in the office and that will make for carelessness, he says.

"I don't believe that gray hair is the handicap it is supposed to be. Men admire grey hair, when it is beautifully arranged, kept in condition. A bright, smiling face, one that expresses intelligence, is a great asset. Men manners, good nature, willingness to adjust oneself to a willing attitude are points are worth gold and treasures to a woman who has to make her way in the world.

"But character isn't discovered until the job has been captured. So it comes down, all the start to plain simple modish clothes with the least expensive trimmings as a great asset. Men manners, good nature, willingness to adjust oneself to a willing attitude are points are worth gold and treasures to a woman who has to make her way in the world.

Thwarting The Child's Ambitions

It Happens Through Mistaken Ideas of Punishment

(By Constance Cameron)

In the affairs and situations that confront each of us every single day, we must, perforce, decide what is significant and what is not, decide what is worth worrying and struggling for and what to shrug away into oblivion so far as we are concerned. And I think that parents feel this more keenly than any other group of people, because they must not only decide for themselves but also they must choose the important, significant thing for their children.

Perhaps concrete examples will illustrate what I mean better than writing generalities.

Betty had gotten the nail biting habit. Betty was fastidious, dressed in her mania, and looked forward to playing in the mid-year recital. But Betty's mother was more concerned over the habit of the child's hands than she was about Betty's love of music. The mother threatened—then punished. Betty was allowed to grow during the month before the recital, without being let to among those missing. Betty tried hard, but gradually, because of the excitement and nervousness attendant upon the final public appearance, the nails somehow were bitten and the complaint of the mother was good her dress. Betty's teacher was told the reason. And Betty, tearfully, sleeplessly, struggled on, she hates music now and has to be forced to practice.

Mistaken Sense of Values

Tom, John and Harry are usually quite astray in her sense of values. For music is the emotion its execution. For Tom, John and Harry, Betty as an adult. The nail biting problem is forgotten. Betty's handicap apart from such an important issue.

Betty's mother is right again by adding a new supplementary "Vitamin-from-Protein" food, named VIP, to your daily diet.

VIP is science's latest contribution to the welfare of mankind. Its basic elements are specially processed life cells or embryos of wheat germ-cked with iron and malt, and flavored with cocoa.

These life cells of wheat are rich in energy-building proteins and in Vitamins A and B1. They are one of the two richest known sources of B1. They are the richest known sources of Vitamin E. VIP, therefore, is a natural Vitamin food, which is also very rich in iron. Two teaspoonfuls of VIP supply as much iron as a whole pound of spinach.

Valuable for Children

VIP is as valuable for building up the vigor, strength and resistance of children as of adults. Science has shown that the addition to a child's diet of an adequate amount of iron, such as is supplied by VIP, will increase the ability to resist disease in fection approximately 50 per cent.

Delightful HOT or COLD

Two rounded teaspoonfuls of VIP stirred briskly in a cup or glas of HOT or COLD milk make a delightful drink, which, for best results, should be taken regularly, at least once a day, to overcome the effects of "Deficiency The Robber" and to materially increase your vigor, strength and resistance.

The makers of VIP maintain research laboratories, under the direction of Dr. F. A. J. Kelller, Ph.D., "where the product is constantly tested and improved. They state its stimulus and iron content, and its nutritional efficiency, are assured.

At Druggists

VIP is obtainable from druggists and department stores in two sizes. 10 oz. at 65c. 20 oz. at $1.10. Full directions given in a booklet with each can.

IS YOUR DIET A THIEF?

Is "Deficiency The Robber" Stealing Your Resistance?

Do you catch cold more easily than you used to? Does a cold hang on longer? Does it take more out of you?

If so, it is altogether likely that your resistance is too low. You lack the power to repel the attacks of cold germs and to recuperate quickly after a cold.

Your diet may be responsible for this condition. It may not be supplying you with sufficient Vitamin A which authorities have found of great therapeutic value in counteracting colds and fortifying the body against infection.

Another Common Deficiency

Your diet may also be deficient in Vitamin B1, an insufficient supply of which causes impairment of strength, vigor and resistance.

Or it may not be providing enough iron. A deficiency in iron lowers resistance and leads to susceptibility to infection, particularly colds and bronchitis.

A New Way To Increase Resistance

If "Deficiency The Robber" has lowered your resistance, you can build it up again by adding a new supplementary "Vitamin-from-Protein" food, named VIP, to your daily diet.

The Beauty Box

To make the fashion grade these days, the coiffure must have perfect social guidance. The time is past when a girl can wad up her hair already, ruy on crimping pins. The only must be a Marcel-waved, may be thinned, if the hair is found to be shapely, the wave stay smooth and glossy. It's gratifying to top off the spring outfit with the clean-cut, flattering hair-dress that the woman up sipps the spirits makes pleasing that familiar reflection in the looking glass. Outlines must be of rather simple character, yet sufficiently decorative to meet the demands of the mob.

Lucky is the woman with wait sirim, tummy so flat, hips so neat that she doesn't require a flesh confining bandage. The properly fitted foundation garment gives smoothness to the robe, accentuates smart lines, prevents fatigue from the habit of wearing corsets. Its impress corrects posture, so necessary for the chic silhouette and the sassy shape. Made of light, strong material it doesn't add much to garment warmth.

Brown and beige are seldom flattering to the complexion unless the brown has a red cast, borders on mahogany. Both colors demand more make-up than other hues, because they rob the complexion of its natural freshness. Green is a good color, calls for almost no rouge, even the lipstick should be light with green a vivid make-up offers quite startling, a contrast. The red rouge is propped up by the use of complexion tallix which must be of a redness that belongs to the same color family.

Black is the best color for the woman who is overweight. Black will get steamed up to facing a reducing course. While makes for width and bulk, so do all the lighter, fainter colors. Cross lines in dress or coat design should be taboo. The long lines of many slender lines will look more slender; the narrow belt at the normal waist line should be avoided. The gown should fit closely.

If you have been friendly with matters and have difficulty in getting it on crabwise and eyeshadow—that is forming a smooth, even line—purchase the liquid product which is more suitable. A fine line of dark brown crayon along the roof of the eyelashes imparts expression to the eyes, but the application must be made discreetly and with steady fingers.

Rake can be placed in the garden all winter. You might try a few stems another year.

Thrilling Adventures of Burgess Bedtime Stories

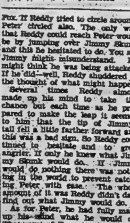
Jimmy Goes About His Business

Attend to business that's your own, And that of others leave alone. —Jimmy Skunk.



Jimmy Skunk was enjoying a situation that filled Peter Rabbit with uncertainty and Reddy Fox with anger and also uncertainly. It was the uncertainty that made Reddy angry. You see Peter had been surprised by Reddy in a place where there was no safe retreat and it had looked for a moment or two as if Peter had come to the end of his days as dear Old Briar-patch. Near by was Jimmy Skunk busily digging for beetles. Peter's wits worked fast. He have a chance and took it. He dodged by Reddy and Reddy had, during the chase, told that Reddy Fox had hard work to overtake Peter. Jimmy Reddy had backed away hastily, but Peter had moved in a little nearer to Jimmy.

Jimmy had been startled by Reddy's rush and had raised his danger signal, which, as you know, is his big tail, and Reddy had headed it. Peter had asked Jimmy for protection and Reddy had denied it, but Jimmy might misunderstand, perhaps that Peter belonged to him and Jimmy wouldn't allow that. Peter was Reddy's until Reddy had caught him and told Reddy that he really thought Peter was his to come and take him. It was right there that the uncertainty entered into what Reddy wanted to know.

Would Jimmy allow Reddy to take him? That was what Peter wanted to know.

Would Jimmy use that dreadful smelly gun of his if he should go close enough to scare Peter? That was what Reddy wanted to know.

Meanwhile Jimmy Skunk went on about his business just as if no one else was about. He continued to pull over chips and pieces of bark in quest of fat beetles. Now and then he caught one and stopped to eat it. All the time as he moved this way and that Peter Rabbit kept him in sight. Always he kept on the opposite side from Reddy up to Jimmy Skunk. That is what Peter thought he was doing.

"You've cheated me out of a good dinner," Reddy snarled.

For if Reddy tried to circle around Peter circled also. The only way that Reddy could reach Peter was by jumping over Jimmy Skunk and this he hesitated to do. You see Jimmy might misunderstand and might think he was being attacked. If he did—well, Reddy remembered the thought of what might happen. Several times Reddy almost made up his mind to take the chance but each time he was prepared to make the leap Jimmy Skunk turned his back and raised his tail fell a little further down. For Reddy knew that the smell of that skunk "You've cheated me out of a good dinner," he snarled.

As for Peter, he had fully made up his mind what he would do. That scent of Jimmy's was dreadful but not so dreadful as those sharp teeth of Reddy's. So if Reddy should jump for him he would crowd right on the opposite side from Reddy up to Jimmy Skunk. That is what Peter thought he was doing.

WALL STREET IMPROVEMENT

Selling in Morning is Readily Absorbed by Buyers

(By Claude A. Lapp, Associated Press Financial Editor)

New York, March 23—The stock market developed a better tone in early afternoon dealings today.

A little further selling was submitted during the morning, but in one of fractions to 2 points—and recovery was effected in the afternoon, when many traders showed a partial reversal of move that caused the list turned extremely dull, however. United States government bonds again displayed pronounced strength, and wheat rallied sharply after an early advance.

The Utilities, particularly, were inclined to recover after yesterday's rubber stamp recessions. American Water Works, American & Foreign and closed extreme losses of around 5 points to fractions, and Consolidated Gas showed a point above the previous close.

STOCKS SHOW BETTER FORM

With Budget Out of Way Rise in Shares Indicated

TORONTO, March 22.—(CP)— While volume continued small the tone was much improved in the afternoon session of the Toronto Stock Exchange today as the position to take a gloomy view of the budget measures. There are so many counter-balancing factors for and clear and showing such a marked measure of improvement than the increase in the Corporation Tax and the levy on dividend payments made in American funds, are not matters to cause immediate distress.

International Nickel worked up to 9 7-8 for a gain of 1-4 and Consolidated Smelters held firm at 60. Other interlisted shares were unchanged or lower. Ford trading at 3 3-8 and C.P.R. selling at 10 for a loss of 1-4.

Aid provided for agriculture if the budget goes Occidental Flow a better tone with a gain of 1-8 to 2 1-2 but the heavy sugar issues were probably accountable for the drop of a point to 25 for Sugar. Second Oil shares were steady.

Car Owners Here Believed Not so Procrastinating as in East

Car owners of this district may be procrastinating in the matter of 1933 licenses, but their deliberations have not been as lengthy as those in the east. Kingston, Brockville and Ottawa, for example.

Following his return to the city on Wednesday from a business trip to Ottawa, where he had occasion to confer with provincial and government officials in the line, with a professional eye, Mr. G. H. Ketchabaw, local issuer of permits for this district, declared the percentage of car owners driving last year's plates to be much greater than in this district.

"Almost all are as many," he declared, when questioned.

HOUSE BEGINS TO BEAR DOWN

Budget For Province to be Read by Premier Henry

Toronto, March 22 (CP) — The Legislature is beginning to buckle down on its welter of business now and again today two committees will hold forth, while private and government legislation will be further forwarded. Tonight, Cabinet members are attending an "At Home" in honor of Premier Henry. Mrs. George S. Henry, so the afternoon session will probably be shortened a bit.

Meanwhile a special committee is today studying ways and means of investigating the complaint of F. J. Murphy, Conn., former Ontario Hydro ticks, that he had been libelled by Gordon Waldron, K.C., prominent Toronto lawyer, who is alleged to have said Mr. Murphy accepted money to introduce a bill before the Legislature. The special committee was appointed by the House yesterday, when it decided to have further investigation before hearing Mr. Waldron before the Bar.

The Mortgagees and Mortgagors Relief Act, which is designed to assist both parties in financial transactions, was also second reading after 14 members had debated the matter for seven hours yesterday. In addition, three other bills were given second reading and 14 measures were given third reading and now await royal assent before becoming law. The House ordered an investigation of the Dovland case on motion of Premier Henry.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Avenue, Ottawa, was solled in three prominent police officials being asked to resign. The investigation, Premier Henry declared, was being conducted "unbiased" by the police.

Repeal is Balance

With the budget coming down tomorrow, much speculation and interest is being shown in Toronto as to what is expected the financial statement will show a decrease in the sum allotted to Governmental estimates, and, no new taxation, although the answer to the succession duties will be given as a slight hint. Barring events, Premier Henry will present the budget in the House this session. Mr. Dennis, however, is known to be considering "up and around" although he has not yet made up his mind.

The Colonization Committee, sitting further this afternoon, has no-tice-bred movement, and the problems attendant to it, was the second meeting of the session this morning. The Committee, partly overlooked in the early part of the session, has aroused wide interest and has grown considerably, many members of the House showing great interest in the farming and whereby relief recipients are enabled to farm lands in the districts in the Northern Ontario write.

HOME IN CENTRE OF QUAKE ZONE

Dishes Flew Out of Cupboard And Plaster Fell Off Walls

TRENTON, March 22.—(Special)—Mrs. Edward Callanane, resident now of Long Beach, California, and a former resident of Trenton, whose home was in the centre of the quake zone, writes the following as follows:—

"Long Beach, March 16th., 1933. "Dear Sister:

"Yours just received and am very sorry to hear that you have been so upset. I am still upset for a month; have had terrible time with my circulation, one time my knees were so stiff I could hardly walk at all.

"So you already heard about the earthquake here. It sure was terrible at 5.54 p.m. Everybody knows it was the end of the world and we are extra lucky to be alive as all I was alone at the time, I heard a dreadful roar and it seemed the house turned right over, dishes and the dishes flew out of the cupboards and crashed and smashed. Then plaster fell in all the rooms. Next, the windows broke and somehow I managed to run out of the house in the street, people were crying and shrieking; brick walls falling and gravel in front. I stood and dying everywhere and the sirens of all the ambulances shrieking, rushing people to the hospitals. Most of them were dead before they got there. Over 200 dear little children were killed.

"I have a real big crack across in my living room and it just flew all over the house. It was a dreadful sensation to feel the very earth heaving from underneath you and it rocked something fierce. We were all out in all. All gas is off so we have no lights, but we are with it all. The soldiers have army kitchens set up and where they give out beans and coffee around camp fires. For days and days everybody has had to sleep out in fields, parks or yards, because when a shock comes the whole house may come right down on your head. Some houses moved right off their foundations while others were twisted almost right in two. You could hardly believe it unless you saw it yourself. The beautiful church is a complete wreck; cost one-half million. We have mass in rigan.

MOVIE BRINGS REAL MAE WEST IN MERRY BOWERY PLAY

Mae West has been honored on Broadway both as an actress and as a playwright. But before all else, she has created a personality. She has not only followed tradition; she has made her own tradition. And she has compiled an unique record, ever since the first burst, sensationally, on the Broadway horizon, as a writer and player, both as well as actress. The moral of which story is that Mae West seems on the way to acquiring a similar record in pictures.

Her "Diamond Lil" is a gaudy, tinsel reconstruction of the famous Mae West has been made in the film version. It is her first starring vehicle, her first picture in fact, except for a bit in George Raft's "Night After Night," in which she virtually stole the picture, and now both story and dialogue are of her authorship. The picture film bears her name individually, and Mae West in Hollywood is not different from Mae West in New York She is still, first and foremost, Mae West.

"She Done Him Wrong" is a story of the Bowery, with Mae West in the role of the voluptuous Lady Lou, the slug at Jordan's Diamond Palace and maker diamonds her career. She judges her men by the diamonds she has given her, and doesn't question where the diamonds come from. That's why Chick Clark (Owen Moore) is in Sing Sing, for stealing diamonds for Lou. That's why Captain Jordan (Noah Beery) is the present incumbent for Lady Lou's favors.

But there's one man who makes Lou forget about diamonds and that is of all things, a psalm-singing Salvation Army captain, whose role is played by Cary Grant. "You ought to be bad," Lou tells him, but for a long time, it looks as if his only interest in Lou is a salvational one. Cary Grant makes the most of his assets as an actor by his performance as "Gunnigan" Beery and Moore, too, contribute priceless characterizations, and the supporting cast includes such stars as Gilbert Roland, David Landau, Rochelle Hudson, Rafaela Ottiano, Grace La Rue, Fuzzy Knight and Tammy Young. But all of them revolve about the dynamic, brilliant, wholly sensually genital figure, Mae West.

You will enjoy Miss West's colorful story, her racy dialogue, her stunning performances as Lady Lou. And you will also enjoy her singing of the famous old "Frankie and Johnnie" as well as two hot, new numbers, "Haven't Got No Peace of Mind" and "A Man Ain't Nothing His Wife Time," written for the star by Ralph Rainger the man who wrote "Moanin' Low" and "Please" and "Here Lies Love," the hit numbers of "the big Broadcast."

Exceptional Sheet Gems

Great care has been taken in the selection of the exceptional three sheet gems that precede the feature offering, and include "Pleasure Island," a tuneful Musical Revue, set in a gorgeous setting, and possible for a collection of delectable girlhood. Romance is the every funny comedy, "Phil Peathe" and the Bello Canadian News with its gist of the latest important news events.

We must apply scientific method to the solution of the problems of human living.—Aldous Huxley.

"ROME EXPRESS" BRITISH MASTERPIECE NEXT AT CAPITOL

Direct from its sensational run at the New Roxy Radio City, and concurrent with its house-packing engagement at the Uptown, Toronto, "Rome Express" arrives at the Capitol Theatre for three big days.

Rudy Vasay, well known movie critic in a review of "Rome Express" in the Toronto Star Weekly of last Saturday's date says

"You will doubtless hear, either in advertisements or reviews, that the picture "Rome Express" is Hitchcock's answer to "Grand Hotel," which would immediately suggest to your mind that the English movie makers have imitated the famous Metro-Goldwyn film. They haven't. They just went to work and constructed a picture along that line that knocks "Grand Hotel" into a cocked hat. However, I won't attempt to take my word for it. Probably the greatest praise is that given unstintingly. The American reviewers, both in the daily press and in the trade papers, have given great delight in a concerted and, to outward appearances, unanimous effort to belittle all British pictures. When "Rome Express" went into the RKO-Roxy Theatre at Radio City they changed the screen to the right-about-face and Richard Watts Jr., in the New York Herald Tribune, after failing the customary cracks at British movies, finds himself forced to say "Rome Express" is so admirably directed and acted that it is an international coup that it becomes not only a sort of milestone in English film production but one of the most entertaining shows of the season. It is, in fact, more of a motion picture than "Grand Hotel" and more effective in story than "Shanghai Express".

"Rome Express" is a beautiful bit of film technique and has a plot that is real melodrama with a series of punchy climaxes. The action takes place during the run of the Train Paris to Rome and the characters are just such a series as one would expect to find on such a train. There is a millionaire and his wife, a famous grand opera singer, her press agent, an international crook and his young accomplice, the latter in love with the screen star, a young wife running away with another man, a cowardly thief, a golfing bore and many other interesting personalities such as one would find on the passenger list of any grand train. The express hasn't pulled out of the station before things begin to happen, as the small isolated events, that go weaving a web which eventually grips them all. The cast is an all-star one with Cedric Hardwicke, Conrad Veidt, Esmeralda "Congress Dances"? Joan Barry, Esther Ralston, Gordon Harker, Hugh Williams and numerous other well known English players. Miss Ralston is resplendently splendid as the screen star, Veidt gives a masterful portrayal of the crook, and Harker is particularly fine as the bore, who although he tires everyone on the train, still conveys the character without tiring the audience. Young Hugh Williams is attractive as the screen star's lover.

"Rome Express" if recommended without qualification, as one of the outstanding screen attractions of the year.

Tonight

Adolphe Menjou and Mayo Methot make their final appearances in "The Night Club Lady" at the Capitol tonight.

POUND VALUE IS REDUCED

Rhodes Budget Sets Sterling at $4.25 For Customs

OTTAWA, March 22.—(CP)—The Government has reduced the "fixed value" of the Pound Sterling, for special duty purposes, from $4.60 to $4.25. The reduction, effective tomorrow, was announced in his budget speech by Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance.

In thus establishing the "fixed value" of the pound at $4.25, the government narrows by 15 cents the margin of special or dumping duty that will be levied on certain imports from the United Kingdom. This sampling duty represents the difference between the "fixed values of the pound and the "average value", which is set each year by the Minister of National Revenue.

At present the "average value" of the pound, effective until March 31, is $4.19.

The two "values" work out in this fashion:

Regular duty on imports from Great Britain assessed on the basis of the pound at par—$4.86 2-3. Due, however, to the depreciation of the pound, a duty, known familiarly as the "Currency Dump" is exacted on imports of a class or kind produced or manufactured in Canada.

"Currency Dump", as indicated, is the difference between this "fixed value ($4.25) and the semi-monthly average value ($4.13). Thus, until end of March, such imports to which the currency dump applies, will be subjected to a special duty of 13 cents to every pound's worth of British goods imported into Canada instead of 27 cents which was in effect today.

Strong Note of Optimism is Seen in New Rhodes Budget

Agricultural Class Helped in Getting Goods to British Market

INCOME TAXES

Conditions throughout the world were grave and it was not unreasonable to spread the burden of present distress over a period of years, the Minister said on. There was no occasion for despair.

"I am of the firm belief," he said, "we can look forward with reasonable confidence to better and happier days. We still retain a large measure of our natural resources which are a heritage from our sturdy pioneer forebears.

"We have overcome all obstacles which in the past have bestrewn our path so will we continue to overcome those which lie ahead here anon."

Little Benny's Note Book

I went up to the herd and animal store after school to see if the little bobby puppy with spots was still there but said yet. Which he was, and he reckonized me rite away as soonas of me having been at so many times to see if he was still there, and I had a liter, saying to the man, Well G. mister, we had a radio set bought on approved and my father finely bawt it, and I bet if I could have him my dog on approval for a little while I bet he'd buy him too.

He sumsibling I've never tried, but nobody can say I'm not progressive, the said to me.

Moonday, I could, and he wrote down my's name and my address and I carried the dog home and he kept on trying to lick my face as if he was a favorite flavor, and ma was in her room sewing on the sewing machine, so she never knew it was him, and he's him, we've got him approved.

Well of all the cute little fellows, she said.

And she took him and he tried to lick her face as if he could tell right away she was some relation of mine, ma saying, Well I declare I never saw such a cumming puppy in my life, he's just too adorable, but you should never of bawt him home, you know your father said we couldn't have him, will he's just the sweetest little pet that ever was, him certnyr is, stop that, stop getting and let me get a look at your pocket, little tase, it's perfectly ridiculous to bring a dog in this house when you know very well your father feels about dogs well you just look like a little dog—

Well, I'll tell you right here what you look like, Mr., you're just a little toy dog, you are, you ewf, he have wheels on your feet, it's absolutely impossible, it's not to be thawt of, I dont know what you were thinking of, Benny, well look at him, little tase, you're just a little angel, you're just too wonderful to be true, it's out of the question for him to stay here, it's just simply impossible, I'll tell you it's utterly absurd in every sentis of the word, it's not to be thawt of, I here your father coming in now, hurry and take the little fellow up to your room and hide him, quick and maybe after your father has had his supper he'll have a change of heart.

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

When the pair had gone when Alanna had left the room, Sam shouted to Moy, "Come here!"

From the window, quickly, and then silence.

"Moy," Sam's wife, his "Oriental flower" flung themselves upon the floor, "Moy, you are a fool!" she cried. "Why shrieked, they kicked, and they bruised me! Why did you not assist in the laughter. One of you must have a broken leg, or the ribs of the cushion."

"Sam, you seem wonderful!" she exclaimed surely," he admitted. "Father I found forward with his head in his hands. "I am a fool in China. Wouldn't that Moy and Sam was surprised to see Mr. Lee, rather, if he had been forced to come.

A gentleman had called up Sam's office on the previous an hour or so before and had insisted upon seeing him himself. The man was with uncompliments and unrefinement. Moy had told him so.

After a lapse of time the person who had called on the 'phone had come into Sam's house, shattering the dignified calm with loud demands and strident demands for immediate audience with the owner. Moy had refused to admit him, but finally given Moy a hundred-dollar bill and when Moy had finally led the way to his employer's door, he had left the man there.

Sam rose and went downstairs, in the ballroom staring with amazement and incredulity at the sound of voices, the mouthing of feet he had heard Albert Wagner.

Wagner's face was haggard, his clothes were torn and his hat bitten to it. When Sam spoke to him he seemed to be mumbled in the agony of intruding. His expression was of mingled loathing and relief.

"You are looking all over—I've been looking all over—I've been looking all over—I've been

MUD PIES—

It's a wonder that many of us are now alive at all, considering what chances we took when we were too young to know better. Consider for example the simple act of making mudpies back of the barn. A bacteriologist at Pittsburgh, who recently observed his small son making mud pies from some dirt that was scooped out of the front yard, made the boy desist, carried a sample of the earth into his laboratory, and carefully and gravely analyzed it. The alarming result of his investigation showed that the sample contained the following number of germs:

Diphtheria	1,800,000
Typhoid	3,450,000
Smallpox	9,000,000
Lockjaw	2,600,000
Dysentery	9,000,000
Pneumonia	6,000,000
Tuberculosis	8,000,000

MAIN STREET Ramblings . . . .

THE LOCKED DOOR—

In another week or so at least one housewife in the city will go thru a strange spring-time ceremonial. The curious custom generally coincides with the appearance of the first robin or two. It consists simply of carefully locking the back door of her home, hiding the key away, and detouring traffic from the back of the house to the front until some time in August— when the baby robins have been hatched. Each year, so she claims, for the past several years, the same robin and rear her young over the alcove on the back door. Since the beginning the robin has held undisputed control of the back verandah, with traffic shifting from the back door to the front. Even the compartively new tradesmen who call at the home know the custom and carefully observe it. The robin, by the way, is so tame each year that it can readily be coaxed into the house and fed little delicacies for the growing young in the nest.

STILL ONE LEFT—

In a previous column or two we gave public utterance to the feelings of a reader who bewailed the passing of the old time veterinary. Not that we have been checked up on it, but we have since learned, through casual conversation, that there is still at least one left in this city. Even the medicines he makes and prescribes are just as good and just as healing to man or beast as they were back in the old days when horse was king, and each hotel advertised head for a horse as well as for man. There are no colored cards in his medicine, even if his calls for the treatment of ailing horses become less frequent, than they were years ago. But he still manages to keep up with the demand made upon him by dog owners, not of the city alone, but of the whole district, and even beyond. There have been cases where those in cities more than a hundred miles away have come to him for advice and treatment for their ailing pets. Through the many years he has been in business his reputation is excellent only by the time-tried medicines he compounds himself. Just this week Dr. O. H. Caswell, V.S., may be seen with a beautiful little collie trotting at his heels. The animal was sent to him by a Toronto owner and was in bad shape when it arrived. Black Cancer, a severe disease in dogs, had almost finished the dog's "Pike." But now he is well again. He was cured by the same medicines that were prescribed for dog owners when many nature men and women now in this city were youngsters.

$2,060,798 PROVINCIAL DEFICIT SHOWN FOR FISCAL YEAR, LIQUOR CONTROL BOARD PROFITS DECLINE $740,000 IN YEAR FOUR MILLION SPECIAL EXPENDITURE IS CAUSE OF DEFICIT

No New Taxes Except Amendment to Succession Duties Act in Province $3,174,000 Expenditure Slash Object

Three Departments Only Show Increase in Revenue

TREASURER ILL

Premier Henry Reads Budget Speech in Legislature

Toronto, March 23 (CP) —With a deficit of $2,060,798 for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1932, Ontario's public accounts were tabled in the Legislature today. Ordinary revenue was shown at $54,176,233 and ordinary expenditure $62,175,086. This indicated a surplus of $2,002,146 but special expenditure of $4,062,944 wiped out this surplus and left the deficit.

Toronto, Ont., March 23 (CP)—No new taxes except an amendment to the succession duties act to close the loopholes, are announced in the budget speech of $3,174,000 ordinary expenditure and $3,253,000 special, a total deficit for 1933 of $6,427,000.

These were features of the Ontario budget speech read in the Ontario legislature by Premier George S. Henry, acting minister of finance in the absence of Hon. W. A. Preudfoot, who is ill.

Ordinary expenditure is expected to be $3,174,000, the budget said. The total estimated is $63,356,000 as compared with $59,459,000 in 1932.

Ordinary revenue will show increases over 1932 of $2,000,000 in succession duties, $1,250,000 in Provincial Treasury's services and subparamountion branch, $1,000,000 in motor vehicles, which shows slight increase due to an increase in the list per license.

Timber Dues Off

The Ontario Liquor Control Board profits dropped $740,000; timber dues dropped $600,000 and totalled $3,368,190. In 1931-32, succession duties dropped $1,000,000 during the year they were $4,139,534.

Among the cuts of the year totalled $605,184,860 compared with the previous year's assets of $551,-782,830. Liabilities were shown at $374,412,383 as compared with $352,-987,593 for the previous year. The net capital assets over total liabilities declined from $31,113,783 at the end of 1930-31 to $30,700,367 at the end of the year.

Ordinary expenditure in 1931-32 were $62,175,086 with the ordinary revenue of $54,176,233 with the previous year there was a deficit on ordinary account of $7,998,852. Special expenditure was down $214,958 while ordinary expenditure was slashed $5,575,307.

Bank Balance Up

Under current assets, it is shown, the province had $30,756,847 on deposit in banks at the end of the year, as compared with only $3,973,564 the previous year.

Money advanced to farmers under the Agricultural Development Act rose from $38,373,350 in 1930-31 to $40,911,000 in the year under review.

Total assets shown list current and capital assets, while the total liabilities include capital and current liabilities. Under capital liabilities, the accounts shown include stock and debentures, increased $44,910,786, to $40,986,011 on October 31, 1932.

The report of the Ontario Savings office also showed a decrease from $36,862,344 to $33,726,918. Besides $377,000 refunded in 1931, $3,911,000 refunded in 1932 to the City of Toronto; adjustments of 1931 Old Age Pensions amounting to $567,000; direct unemployment Relief $606,000 and excess charge on United States Funds $1,-000,000.

The Budget makes allowance for $1,000,000 overdraft from revenue for the Liquor Control Board. In 1932, $1,000,000 was taken from this and the estimated profit for 1933 is $3,-000,000, an increase of $1,700,000. So too with the Gasoline Tax. In 1932, $1,000,000 was taken from it while this year it is expected to bring only $11,100,000 or $1,900,000 less than last year. Indicating the Government's economy measure it is noted as the House applauded wildly when would be refused request for increasing our armaments if the others would agree to reduce reproduction of bombs.

The Chancellor spoke for three quarters of an hour. He was frequently interrupted by cheers, and when he finished there was a tremendous ovation.

Peace on Equality

"We desire to live in peace with all nations but on a basis of equality," the Nazi Chancellor said.

"Ten years of peace is better than 10 years of dividing up of territories and vanquished. Our hand is stretched out in every peace willing fundamentality to forget the past."

He expressed appreciation for Great Britain's efforts to obtain concrete action in disarmament at Geneva and he paid especial tribute to Premier Mussolini for his peace plan for stabilizing European peace.

What Keeps Province Running

TORONTO, March 23 (C.P.)—Where does the money come from to turn the governmental wheels? Ontario's budget today answers the question. Here is the statement showing the sources of ordinary revenue, which totalled $54,176,233.

Dominion Government, annual subsidy: $3,000,830.

Revenue derived from individuals and corporations receiving the benefit of provincial services, special privileges for the use of natural resources and properties and profits from trading, etc:

Taxation—Gasoline, mines, lands, corporation, race tracks (betting) amusements, stock transfers and wills: $21,987,926.

Licenses—Motor vehicles, motor liquor permits, hunting and fishing, insurance, loan and trust companies, mines, race tracks, theatres, etc.: $8,622,362.

Fees—Local registrars, police magistrates, crown attorney, etc.; fire marshal, mine recording, companies and brokers' registration, etc., land transfers, motor vehicle transfers, etc.: $1,587,483.

Fines and penalties: $111,216.

Profits from trading activities—Liquor Control Board, profits, fines sales of confiscated liquor, etc.: $2,367,630.

Succession duties—$4,136,534.

Natural resources—$12,438,536.

Interest on drainage and sundry loans—$304,616.

Miscellaneous—Ontario Gazette, sale of government publications, sale of government property—$203,454.

And thus Ontario's residents help pay her bills.

Hitler Says End of Communism is Saving of Europe

OLIVE BRANCH

Germany's Tribute to Mussolini's Peace Plan

Berlin, March 23—(AP)—Chancellor Adolf Hitler declared today in the Reichstag, with only the Socialists opposing, today passed an empowering act granting him dictatorial powers, demand for four years of dictatorial power.

Berlin, March 23 (AP)—Restoration of the German Monarchy is a matter for future consideration which does not demand immediate attention, Chancellor Adolf Hitler told the Reichstag today in presenting his demand for four years of dictatorial power.

The destruction of Communism, he declared in outlining his four year plan, is a "purely domestic question which does not concern any foreign power."

"Further development of Communism in this country," he said, would be a danger to not only all Europe.

He dealt only in a general way with economic issues.

No Currency Experiments

"Capital must serve business," he told parliament. "Business must preserve the interests of the people. We will not undertake, therefore, experiments with the currency."

Further disarmament he reiterated the familiar German thesis: Germany has been waiting years for the fulfillment by other nations of their promise to reduce armaments, he decried as the House applauded wildly we would be forced reluctantly increasing our armaments if the others would agree to reduce reproduction of bombs.

The Chancellor spoke for three quarters of an hour. He was frequently interrupted by cheers, and when he finished there was a tremendous ovation.

Peace on Equality

"We desire to live in peace with all nations but on a basis of equality," the Nazi Chancellor said.

BUTTER STOLEN FROM CREAMERY

Forcing an entrance into the Mason Creamery, robbers broke the safe free, but failed to gain entrance door later to pry the padlock from the large refrigerator and steal some 70 pounds of butter, it was discovered Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning.

The robbers used a large jimmy found to be open in the back of the building and the refrigerator. The jimmy bar was found lying in the middle of the creamery floor early Wednesday morning, when the first employee arrived for the creamery.

The butter taken by the thieves was the last churning of the week, as it had not been pressed into prints as yet. The robbers endeavored to break into the strong box in the office and steal the day's receipts, but failed in their efforts as the box proved too substantial for them. Owing to the fact, that the company had discovered all their days out-put of butter no prints or moulds of butter were made up for future use.

It is reported that the robbers were not immediate residents of the Mason district as they broke and entered the garage operated by Mason's Creamery, which is a business to the creamery, and stole a quantity of gasoline. The provincial police investigated the robbery but nothing of an authentic nature relative to the solution of the case has yet been arrived at.

PER CAPITA COST IS LOWEST OF ANY CITY

Questionnaire by City Engineer Brings Information

Through a questionnaire that has just been completed by the city engineer, Mr. Chas. A. Mott, it is shown that Belleville's water collection system as at present carried out in the city costs less per capita than any other city or town in the province who have answered the questions.

Approximate cost per capita for collecting and disposal in this city has been set at thirty two cents. Nearest to this low cost comes Peterborough with $1; Oshawa with $2; Sault Ste. Marie with $3; and Brantford with $4.

Length of haul, method of disposal and other factors were taken up by the questionnaire.

Only early milk they could find for it was condensed milk.

STOCK MART ON UPSWING

First Hour of Trading Carried Stocks up 2 to 5 pts.

By Claude A. Jagger, Associated Press Financial Editor)

New York, March 23.—The stock market threw off its reactionary mood in the early dealings and recovered vigorously for a time today.

An upsweep of prices in the first hour carried a number of issues up 2 to 5 points, a net of $7,628,000 to cover in a market from which short sellers had been driven. Trading slackened later, but more than half of the early advance was still sustained by noon. Another Early strength also appeared in certain specialties.

MID-WEEK MARKET LARGELY ATTENDED

While a bright sun on the morning of the purchasing citizens and the warmth of the day made Belleville's Thursday morning market, one of the largest in point of those attended, there was a large number of farmers' wives and daughters present and other products of the soil during the hours of trading.

CASH BRANCH FACTORY ON COAST NOT DAMAGED

Letter Received by J. O. Morby to This Effect

First hand information on last Friday's earthquake in California, and a vivid description of the first heavy jarring, was received by residents of the earth in that locality, is contained in a letter received by Mr. Frank Goodchild, president of the J. and J. Cash Company, of Norwalk, Connecticut, from his Pasadena branch manager, Mr. Ernest Taylor, of Nowayton, Los Angeles. The letter, which was forwarded by the letter to Mr. J. O. Herrity, manager of the local Chandler of Canada, states that he is well acquainted.

In the letter which was received, it was related how the watch clicked on the front of the quake, as well as several of the inland cities and towns. Fortunately the Cash plant there was minor and with the exception of disarrangement of machinery and broken articles, was mostly confined to cracked plaster and broken windows.

The Belleville branch factory is one of several owned by the J. and J. Cash Company.

GIVE SUPPORT PROPAGANDA HEALTH FILM

Estimate of Social Disease in Belleville 10 to 11 Per Cent

So important is education along the line of social disease to the public that at a meeting of citizens held in the Y.M.C.A. late Wednesday afternoon support to the propaganda picture "The End of the Road," which is to be shown in the city next week for three days at the Capitol Theatre was pledged. Attention of various civic organizations and the citizens generally will be drawn to the feature film and the accompanying medical films.

Mr. J. A. Gardiner who is organizing the interest in this city in support of the Dominion Social Hygiene Council campaign of education of the people generally to support which the medical profession, the educational and social authorities and the press have lend to the effort. He also noted that under present conditions there are 100,000 social disease in Canada costs $1,311,000,000 during the depression and of the war. There are, it is estimated, 400,000 cases of social disease in Canada, and it is estimated can be conservatively estimated from the eleven per cent. of the population of Belleville suffers from the ills the consequences of social diseases in such cases here. Of course these are not all registered cases (registration is required under the law), because many cases are kept from public information. That the Belleville estimate is not exaggerated was shown by the fact that there are 1,000 cases in a place sixty per cent. of the population of Belleville.

The failure of parents to warn sons and daughters of the danger of social disease was deplored by Mr. Gaster, who urged that parents warn their sons and mothers bring their daughters to see these showings which are run strictly under the ban of censorship.

Education along these lines is of paramount necessity for the scourge has reached alarming proportions.

The tragedy is that so many people do not realize that these diseases are curable, although with one of the two the same progress is reported that is made against the other."

The showings of the film and the medical pictures in Belleville will be made a succession of three days' duration and other citizens will take part.

The devastation by venereal diseases was stressed in the facts brought before the citizens at the meeting by Mr. Gaster.

The propaganda has involved the expenditure of perhaps four million dollars—certainly a saving of many times this amount. It has been possible to spend this money because of the fact that the public opinion has demanded such expenditure. Legislation cannot advance unless public opinion demands its advance. Therefore, Dr. Boyle said, as that carried on in Montreal this week under the auspices of the Canadian Social Hygiene Council are of supreme importance.

It is hoped that the films pictures will impress our audiences with the supreme importance of acting more vigorously the serious menace of venereal diseases. It is not to be assumed that success will result from over-optimistic activity and care for dealing with the production of venereal diseases in the community.

Nor should the showing of films not solve the problem, although information through every ground pertaining to their children will perhaps help. The educational effect of a health science on the part of everyone, so that we may be all living with the desire to build up a nation composed of citizens with sane minds in sound bodies. It is the ideal for which we should all strive.

BICYCLE RIDER'S CAR TURNS TURTLE ON ROAD

Jules Andy, Truck Star Escapes Injury in Crash

Jules Andy, Canadian six day bicycle racer of Montreal, completely turned his car over in the north ditch on Dundas street west, in front of the Allen residence, when his car skidded on the icy pavement about 8 a.m. Thursday morning.

Andy, accompanied by a friend, was driving eastward at the time of the accident. Apparently the car started to slide on the rather icy pavement, and in trying to right his car, but in doing so it suddenly turned towards the north ditch turning completely over, travelling further as the vehicle righted itself again, coming to a full stop standing on all four wheels and facing directly north.

Sergeant Bigoh was summoned and after taking names, that no serious damage had been the result allowed the car have its self re-moved to a local garage for repairs. Neither occupant of the car received the slightest injury during the entire proceedings. As for the damage to the car, only a few scratches and dints were observed on the fender and where the car hit the frozen ground as it turned over.

Late Stephen Burrows

Tribute after a lifetime of friendship is paid by Mr. W. D. Robb of Hanover, former resident of Belleville, to the late Stephen Burrows, whose demise is so deeply mourned by all classes of citizens. Mr. Robb's tribute is typical of the love and friendship of the late Mr. Burrows. Reads:—

"The Bolton Ave., Westmount, Quebec, March 20, 1933.

"The Editor,
"The Ontario Intelligencer"
"Belleville, Ont.

"Dear Sir,

While in Belleville last week, attending the funeral of my old friend, Mr. Stephen Burrows, my mind went back to the commencement of our friendship of nearly fifty years.

"As locomotive foreman, I went to Belleville in 1882, a very young man and a complete stranger. Kindness, goodwill and good fellowship was extended to me and to my young wife by the employees and trades officers of the old Grand Trunk, and, also, by the citizens of Belleville generally.

"As all our children were born in Belleville, during our stay there (I was foreman there for about twenty-three years), you can readily understand that the late Mr. Belleville has in all our hearts and why we had such a large part in laying the old home town.

"We made many dear friends in Belleville, but none more dear than the late friend Mr. Burrows and his family, and, while a welcome was given by all to the city, none was kinder to us than Mr. and Mrs. Burrows. They opened their hearts to the home and family of Belleville. They extended to us all the goodwill and friendship which could formed a friendship lasting through all these years.

"While in our busy lives we formed many friendships, which, time and time over, bear than the friendship of our old Belleville friends. You may be sure, Mr. Editor, that when how keenly we feel Mr. Burrow's death from us by the hand of death for him, as he had lived his life as a Christian man. He is—to the full, and had done his work ir ever man in getting the undiscerned ready. We feel.

"He was a sterling character; yet he was mild and gentle. If it can be said of any man, it can be said of him: "In him there was no offence, no guile." He lived with in perfect harmony with his wife. To these he has left behind there heartfelt sympathy and prayers. No man stood higher in the esteem. We were privileged to know and share in his friendship. We all know and feel that we have lost a friend, a loving husband and father and as a citizen of Belleville. His hand and heart were open to all. It is left to us to cherish and imitate his example. He has passed from our view, but we feel that some day again until he stands forth to answer to his name at the Roll Call, when the great of earth are summoned in the morning of the last great Reveille. Till then, farewell, gentlest of spirits, noblest of hearts.

Somewhere I have seen the following, which seems so applicable to our dear departed friend:

"The gentle soul has passed to the great beyond. When the light of his life was out, there was a new radiance in eternity, and somewhere, the glow of it relieves the darkness which is left behind. Never a soul but has gone there's a new life, never a sacrifice, but somewhere an atonement; never a death, but somewhere and somehow, an achievement."

"He hath gone on the journey that all must go, and no return. He hath found that peace which is the crown of failure and of years."

"I bear this tribute and testimony to our dear departed friend:

"He was a true Christian man;

Yours sincerely,
"W. D. Robb."

LABOR ASSOCIATION DONATE NEW BROOMS

Purchased From Money of Previous Activities

New brooms are sweeping clean the corners of over was hundred streets in this city today, the result of a free donation by the Belleville Labor Association.

When it was learned that brooms, which had become worn out could not be replaced by the Central Relief Bureau under the voucher system to the needy of the city the local association took the matter of supply up, and from their private funds purchased over one hundred brooms.

These were given to all who attended the meeting of the association in the city hall last evening.

Citizens who saw over one hundred men parading the streets late last evening, with one hundred new brooms on their shoulders stared in wonderment at the strange spectacle.

FOUR NEW IMPELLERS TO BE INSTALLED

Explains Time Is Due Since May 1918

Four new impellers for the water turbines, which pump the city's daily supply will be installed in the filtration plant at the beginning of the next month by the Turbine Equipment Company of Toronto, which has been awarded the contract for the supply at a cost of $2,700. Plans for the installation were drawn by the consulting engineers, Macrodd and Storie, who designed the local plant. The impellers will replace those in use, which was originally installed in the plant on May 1st, 1918, and which had become badly worn by the silt and sediment in the water present before the filtering system was installed. The length of service given by the old impellers is said to be remarkable by engineers, under the conditions which they formerly operated.

TRUCK SKIDS INTO DITCH

Carrying Plan, March 23 — It is astonishing how widespread are the effects of the recent disastrous earthquake in California. It might be incorrect to say that the quake was felt here, but it has had its effects all the same. As if to justify the bragging of Californians that theirs is "Don't Quake," it seems that no matter how small the town or village of Ontario, every one has several direct ties with the stricken area in the form of sons, daughters, friends, or relatives living there and then, if it is to make a mock of such a brag there comes to mind the devastation just cast. A telegraphic assurance of their safety has reached her, and Mrs. L. Young of Carrying Plan from their son and his wife and from Mrs. Young's mother, who live within the stricken area. Owing to the congestion of telegraphic messages which have been crowding up the wires, it took some time to get the news through and assurance of their safety had been felt.

MEDICAL AND POLITICAL PROGRESS.

Conquest of cancer in a relatively few years is the prediction of Dr. W. L. Coffman of New York, made before the Pan-American Medical Congress at Dallas, Texas, yesterday. Definite and positive cure early in the early stages has been accomplished and he believes complete victory over the dread disease is a matter of a few years only. Hitherto branches of research have been working separately, but with co-ordination of effort rapid progress has come.

When medicine and surgery rout cancer they will have achieved one of the greatest conquests of science—the elimination of one of the world's scourges, which has been growing more and more pronounced in recent years. The increased attention of science upon the disease is in large measure aroused by the greater number of persons who have been stricken.

Science is moving rapidly forward and in the field of health and medical education mankind is reaping the harvest of research. This progress as contrasted with the rate of progress in economic and political ideals is marked. Even while science is achieving, mankind is struggling in the midst of a depression in which many cherished ideals of men are suggested for the discard or at least many people are wondering whether they are worth all that for which they have been credited.

But just as truly as though more slowly than science is conquering disease so truly will mankind battle its way through politically. The difference in the rate of progress is that there is so much exactitude in medical science while political or economic science is scarcely a science at all, or at least not a science in quite the same sense as medicine and surgery.

TREND IN GERMANY

The present trend in Germany is interesting in the light of the unusual turn of events with the accession of Adolf Hitler to power by a very small majority. Militarism and autocracy are rampant, and stories which drift through from that country tell of slaughter of Jews. Arrests of those who would oppose the present regime are general. Concentration camps are being formed to take care of them.

Dictatorship seems to be having its innings at the present moment and how far the old monarchy is away from power is uncertain. There is talk of the former Crown Prince assuming the throne of his exiled father and even of the ex-Kaiser returning to authority at Potsdam.

Everything is melodramatic on the face of it and one wonders whether the average German mind has gone mad, or whether Hitler is not using the old monarchical figures as navies to beguile the people, and strengthen himself in power. Hitler probably must be performing magic tricks all the time otherwise his seat would be unsafe.

BROCKVILLE CUTS TAX RATE

Brockville is this year going to luxuriate in a two mill tax decrease for which the Recorder and Times gives credit to the council administration and the officials. This is the decrease in five years to four and a half mills. This achievement in the face of difficult conditions is reported to the collection of taxes and other revenue points to hearty co-operation of all branches of the civic services to bring the rate down, thus giving the taxpayers some sort of relief.

The Recorder and Times pays high tribute to the officials and civic employees who have sacrificed salaries to make this possible.

Commenting on general conditions the newspaper says:

"It becomes more and more apparent that the rate of taxation must be brought down in harmony with the reduced ability of the ratepayer to meet his tax bill. Nothing is to be gained by retaining a high rate of taxation when it is beyond the capacity of numerous individuals and when it can only lead to the accumulation of tax arrears."

COAL

Canadian mines produced more than half the coal made available for consumption in Canada during the first eleven months of last year, says the monthly review of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of the coal mined in Canada, Alberta produced approximately 41 per cent., Nova Scotia 36 per cent. and British Columbia 15 per cent. Alberta leads in coal reserves among the provinces of the Dominion with British Columbia following next, though at a considerable distance. There are also large coal deposits in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Of the coal imported into Canada in the eleven months of last year, anthracite was almost evenly divided between American and British, the United States figure being somewhat the greater, while of bituminous imports the United States supplied about 95 per cent.

The actual coal reserves of the Dominion have been calculated at 414,804,193 thousand tons, almost one half of the basis of actual thickness and extent, and probable reserves are estimated at approximately 201,986,117 thousands of tons. The actual reserves of Alberta are calculated at 382,500,000 tons of lignite, 3,223,800 thousand tons of bituminous and 669,000 thousand tons of mixed anthracite and bituminous. The actual reserves of British Columbia are placed at 23,71,242 thousands of tons of anthracite and bituminous and 60,000 thousand tons of lignite, while Saskatchewan reserves are 2,412,000 thousand tons of lignite. For Nova Scotia the actual reserves are given at 2,188,151 thousand tons of bituminous.

SAY THIS OF HORSES

Across the ages they come thundering
On faithful hoofs, the horses mad disowned.
Their velvet eyes are wide with wondering,
They whinny down the wind in silver tones
Vibrant with all the burgies of old war;
Their nostrils quiver with the summer scent
Of grasses in deep fields lit by pale stars.
Hung in a wide and silent firmament.
And in their hearts they keep the dreams of earth
Their patient plodding furrowed to the sun
Unnumbered springs before the engine's birth
Doomed them to sadness and oblivion.
Across the swift new day I watch them go
Driven by wheel and gear and dynamo.

Say this of horses: engines leave behind
No glorious legacy of waving manes
And wild proud hearts, and heels before the wind.
No heritage of ancient Arab strains
Blazes within a cylinder's cold spark;
An engine labors with a sullen fire,
Hoarding no dreams of acres sweet and dark;
No love for man has ever surged thru' wire!
Along the farthest slopes I hear the rumble
Of those last hoofs—tomorrow they will be still;
Then shall the strength of countless horses crumble
The staunchest rock and level the highest hill;
And man who made machines to gain an hour
Shall lose himself before their ruthless power.

RATHER A COINCIDENCE that two of the greatest screen plays yet produced should be shown in Belleville the same week. "Cavalcade" and "Rome Express," but the most interesting part of this coincidence is that both films are British, directed and acted by British players. Hollywood has long feared British competition and screen writers have dipped their pens in gall, metaphorically speaking, when writing about British films, and have hinted every supposed weakness of production or acting in the British cinema plays. However, "Cavalcade" and "Rome Express" bowled the Yankee critics completely over and they had to admit that here were two screen productions that Hollywood has never equalled. British pluck and stick-to-itiveness gets there in the long run with whatever they tackle.

The young son of the house went into the dining-room where the young man was waiting to take out his sister.

"Oh, Mr. Tubb," the youngster said, "what cricket club do you belong to?"

The young man looked puzzled. "I'm afraid I don't belong to any," he replied. "Why do you ask?"

"That's funny, replied the boy, "I just heard my sister tell mother that you were a good 'catch'."

INFANTS AND THEIR CARE IS EXPLAINED

Better to Raise Few Children Well Than Dozen Haphazardly

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health And Psychology

Every woman at some time in other sane moments asks the question: "How Many Babies Should I Have?" In fact, she is likely to think about the subject, even before marriage by, after all, motherhood is an instinctive yearning, a biological and inevitable urge, that must needs find a prominent place in a woman's thoughts and feelings.

That the answer to the question is bound to be an important factor in the size of the family goes without saying. Surely it is better to raise a few children well than a dozen in a haphazard fashion. Not only for the benefit of the individual himself, but for the race as a whole, it is highly desirable that a child have a healthy body, a sound mind, and be reared according to the highest educational standards.

Unfortunately, the most intelligent families are apt to have the smallest number of children. Many parents, as a rule, are over-careful. Fearing an insult to the right thing by their offspring they lean back too far, only to spoil them. Conservatism leads them to reproduce too little when it is just such highgrade stock which is most benefited by the most.

There are mothers, however, who realize all that I have written, yet who nevertheless are tormented by a fear of motherhood—not that they will be incapable of taking care of the child after it is born, but rather their fears relate to child birth itself.

Such women should remember that childbirth is not less in its the least hazardous if the proper precautions are taken. I grant that women of every age and decade back had an easier time than those of the present day and age. But science has kept pace with modern woman's more highly developed nervous system. Accordingly, the doctor who nowadays calls himself a specialist in obstetrics adequately take care of any unusual or difficult situation that may arise.

After the first baby, succeeding births are likely to be easier. Nevertheless, no alarm should be felt because the previous mother is entering upon a new experience. What she should do, however, is to be doubly cautious in placing herself in a competent physician's care as soon as she realizes her condition, the reason being that in a first childbirth one cannot readily tell exactly what the reactions of the patient will be.

Always it must be borne in mind that childbearing is a natural process. In fact, many old women will tell you that they never felt so well in their lives as during the months preceding childbirth. Even first and difficult parturition can be met astonishingly at that time, and after the birth of the baby weight increase results, the nervous system is stable and the mother enjoys the peace of mind that is normal.

What every woman should specially guard against is the gossip of well-meaning friends and relatives. Usually any one of these is colored by the prejudices or experiences of the one who utters it.

Women need babies, and the world needs them too. And if you have any doubt as to how many your quota should be have a heart-to-heart talk with your family doctor.

700 STRIKING UNDERGROUND

Ready to Die of Hunger in Mine Rather Slowly Starve Jobless

Warsaw, Poland March 23 (AP)—Declaring they would rather die of hunger underground than slowly starve to death while striking against more than 700 coal miners at Klimontow have barricaded themselves in the mines; Federal authority over security issues; Federal regulation of banking; and restriction of use of Federal Reserve Bank funds in speculative enterprises.

Railroads—Assurance to railroads of national support conditioned upon reorganization with due consideration to investors and workers; Federal regulation of competing motor carriers; consolidations where competition is lacking; firm regulation of "railroad holding companies."

If Congressional temperament leads to prolonged debate and glacial progress in the administration's push the extra session into the regular session, the President-elect is well wait until the regular session but there is no doubt that Mr. Roosevelt wants the entire list of items of this far-reaching programme to be enacted into law at this session.

This legislation, which will provide also for the reduction of interest rates on mortgages, will be ready for Congress the first week of March.

The new legislation is contemplated to include both government and private mortgages.

The President has two purposes in mind in his proposed credit legislation.

First he wants to unite into one or two agencies the eight federal farm credit organizations now in existence. By this he also hopes to get the banks back into the banking and joint stock land banks on a sound and workable basis.

Secondly he wants to bring about a real refinancing of mortgages now borne by farm and home owners.

MAKE PROPOSALS UNDER NEW DEAL

(By Francis M. Stephenson)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, March 22.—Definite concrete proposals were advanced by Roosevelt to reform the United States banking and railroad situations under his "new deal" arranging today.

The major proposals he wants Congress to enact are:

Banking—Requirement of sworn statements of bonuses and commissions paid officers; Federal supervision of National Banks; disorganization of security affiliates of commercial bank deposits; separation of commercial and investment banking; and restriction of use of Federal Reserve Bank funds in speculative enterprises.

Railroads—Assurance to railroads of national support conditioned upon reorganization with due consideration to investors and workers; Federal regulation of competing motor carriers; consolidations where competition is lacking; firm

Ramblings

PERSPICACITY—

Little boy attempting to post a letter in a mail box on the corner of Victoria Avenue and Front St. Wednesday evening. Reach too short by over a foot, even on tiptoe. Looked around. Nobody near. One idea. Lowered letter until coin slot was deserted. But, was he stumped? No. Indeed. A grocery store still with its lights burning, caught his eye. Into the store he marched and sought out the manager. Out he came with a wooden box about a foot high. Under the mail box he placed the wooden one, mounted it, posted the letter, with a couple of inches to spare, and walked away. A boy under his age again he retraced his steps to the store and returned it.

CHANGING HABITS—

And, finding my way down the street, almost as far as you care to go, right through the plate glass windows of their neat little shops, were the ginger ale changing habits of barbers in the city. In these days, it appears, the craft as a rule are unanimous in their choice of bobbies. When the bobby gets fired and he has to become out, Many beautiful objects of art can be seen in many of their windows, placed there for the admiration of the passerby, many of which are of a humorous nature to chase some particularly appealing and fragile piece that took hours of the barber's time and many saw blades to fashion. Now they have momentarily turned from the delightful fashioning of intricate parquetry which at one time, in the soft white wood, to jig-saw puzzles, spending hours and hours of the spare at varying prices, and all of them beyond the reach of the ginger ale fan's skill. Those particularly choice scenes from old calendars and the like covers are at a premium in their ranks.

KEEP A SCRAP BOOK—

EAT HERE—

Have to call attention the rather conservative wording of the advertisement in a mid-city restaurant this way with a sense of humour and a long black pencil carefully printed in one of the windows of their cards: "Eat Here or We Both Starve."

THE REMAINDER—

Members of the staff of a local school hang a picture of the first entrance class to be officially passed from the school after it was built, on the wall years ago. Out of the fourteen in the picture, nine successfully passed the entrance examination that year, three of the boys died comparatively young, one by becoming doctor; one passed the intermediate examination in the next year; one was killed overseas; one of the girls is a teacher; another boy is an architect, and one is a druggist.

SEE YOUR DOCTOR

To feel tired and out of sorts once in a while is no reason for your becoming worried about yourself.

If these spells are of fairly regular occurrence you should consult your doctor.

The old machine that is you won't run smoothly all the time without an occasional pepping up, or looking after, you know. Give as much attention to your own mechanism as you would to your car.

That ought to be apparent, without argument.

Usually you can bring to mind some thing that you have done that you ought not to have done, when you do not feel well.

The body will stand a lot of punishment and is elastic enough to take care of itself if given a chance.

But, like a car, it will knock and sputter and won't take too much abuse.

But worrying about your health won't do you one bit of good.

You are to be pitied if you cannot get to a doctor or to one of the clinics to be examined if you are really ill.

Apply to the proper source for such attention and you will get it.

Meanwhile don't worry or feel alarmed, for doctors can do wonderful things fi these days.

How to Make A Complexion Wear Well

One wonders sometimes if women don't put a bit too much faith in cosmetics and those restful, luxurious rubs—lube with aromatic creams that they get at the beauty-ry.

Not that we're saying a word against the enchanting toilettries, the powders, the clove-pink blushes, the cooling lotions. Not a bit by it.

But don't they put the notion into a girl's head that she can come stripping in at dawn, snatch a few hours sleep, and the magic treatment will weave her worn beauty threads all together again?

Cosmetics soothe the skin surface. According to their character they are healing or decorative, but they can't possibly compensate for the willful breaking of health rules. There's no cosmetic in bottle or jar that will wipe away the drawn look of fatigue that comes from lack of sleep. Nor is there anything offered by the cosmetic chemists that will erase evidences of rage or worry.

Considering that one's face has to endure for a life time and there's no way of getting a new one when that's wrecked, considering the stampede that goes on in the search for beauty, you'd think that every intelligent woman would be mindful of the trifles that go toward dimming down the radiance of youth. She's pretty, safe until she's about 25. After that the process of complexion destruction starts up. A mean arrangement, we all agree. But it has to be faced.

Skins vary like fabrics. Some are sheer and transparent, delicate as chiffon. Some are velvety, carry a dull surface. Others are leathery, immune to weather, strong and sphinxlike. But all of them suffer from wear and tear.

For every type of complexion, every condition, there are toilet table aids, but the great need for the preservation of every complexion is a strong, healthy body, one that is well cared for.

An unsound nervous system throws the complexion into a panic. Tranquil women have better skins than jumpy ones. The woman who indulges in tears can so completely change her face as shiny that she'll look like sixty. Under tissues give way before the deluge, tissues sorrow interferes with the normal functioning of the digestive organs, and a strike on forces that go toward rebuilding.

Those women who prowl round the house most of the night instead of getting to bed early. They have wrong sleeping hours, brought about by silly notions. If they can't sleep they can at least remain quietly, relaxed, in bed, rest, relax.

That much to do with the complexion. Fried foods, rich pastries, produce oiliness of the epidermis. Others invites blackheads blackheads bloom into pustles. Too much food creates roddiness, enlarged pores, not enough food, or the wrong kind is responsible for pallor, greyness or a cuticle that is tinged with a yellow-green cast.

Lack of fresh air and lack of exercise slow up the circulation, rob the complexion of the nourishment and stimulation to which it is entitled.

Good health makes for good looks and good spirits. Without it the whole world's ugly. So trot along with Lady Hygeia and be beautiful.

Change the Hairdress Frequently

So Good For The Hair And It Uplifts The Morale

(By Helen Follett)

Don't steel your mind against a coiffure change, fair one. Very bad habit, that. A new hairdress is no killing matter if it doesn't impart the ecstatic thrill that has been expected, the experimenter can go back to first principles. Hair thrives like a house afire as every woman knows, the trot-trotting to the beauty shops for a hair cut being a frequent and casual pilgrimage. New cuts are fairly short, sometimes a snug shingle close to the nape, the shorn portion curtained with flat ringlets, or those soft puffs that are so quaint, naive and suggestive or romantic yore-times.

Timidity the beauty preacher sopprovokes the subject of excessive perspiration. It's not a pleasant theme, and perhaps it isn't mannerly to infer that some of the followers of pulchritude are thus afflicted. Dress fitters declare that skin odors are a common ill. There are deodorants that qualify, some of the stronger ones sear the skin, close the pores completely, need only be used three or four times a year. Properly applied they do not harm. Salt rubs are recommended, also bathing with a solution of baking soda.

Only the nifty dresser who is a step ahead of current fashions, should monkey with eye shadows, which are suitable only for the dashing type. They must be lavished with artistery. It is doubtful if they add to the full quota of loveliness when in the glad light of day. Colors include browns, greens, blues, gray, bronze and violet.

The housewife claims she doesn't need exercise, the broom or mop, dusting cloth furnishing her with more than plenty. True enough, if she goes about the home job the right way, bending at the hips instead of from the waistline, carrying her head erect, body tall. The slouching pose can become a habit; it puts on an appearance of age, should be avoided.

Cut toe nails straight across. Ingrowing nails will never be cured so long as the shoe presses on the outer edge of the big toe. Callouses on the heels are caused by shoes that are too large or shapeless.

"My blankets never shrink or mat"

Save Blankets—save Money—this easy way

It preserves the ELASTICITY that keeps wool soft, "live" and new

Thrifty women everywhere save money by washing their blankets in Lux. Lux is made to preserve the elasticity of wool, so the delicate fibres don't shrink and mat. That's why it keeps blankets so downy and fluffy—just like new.

LUX for woollens

Do you know that Lux in the DISTPAN keeps your hands lovely as if you had maids? Costs little.

Wash this easy way: Make thick, lukewarm Lux suds. Squeeze the suds through the blanket—rinse in 3 lukewarm waters. Hang in shade, never near heat.

Never rub woollens with cake soap—this destroys elasticity, makes the fibres draw up and shrink, mats and harshens the surface.

Avoid ordinary soaps—cakes, powders, chips. These often contain harmful alkali which shrinks wool, as well as coarsens and fades it. Lux has no harmful alkali. Anything safe in water is safe in Lux.

Sweaters and knitted things —measure before washing. After washing, shape to the original measurements, and dry flat on a board or table.

Baby woollens need especially gentle care. Always use Lux, because it contains no harmful alkali to irritate the baby's tender skin.

TRADE SLOW AFTER FLURRY

Early Demonstration of Buoyancy Seen in Forenoon

Toronto, March 23 (CP)—Trading dropped back to a normal level after an early demonstration of buoyancy on the Standard Mining Exchange today. Some of the base metal shares were stronger, particularly Consolidated Nickel and the leading golds maintained a strong front but buying at mid afternoon was rather scattered.

In the high priced group Lake Shore held firm at 36.50. Hollinger at 7.15, Wright Hargreaves at 4.10 while Dome gained 25 to 18.50. Premier 19 to 5.85 and Teck Hughes slipped back 3 cents to 4.07.

Buying of the silver shares was light and price changes unimportant.

In the base metals Nickel held its gain of 40 at 10.10, Noranda also was stronger at 23.25, up 20.

ACTIVITY IN METAL SHARES

Stocks Continue Firm in The Afternoon Session

Toronto, March 23 (CP)—Stocks continued firm in the afternoon session of the Toronto Stock Exchange with activity centred chiefly in the base metals. International Nickel and Noranda were both up 25, and Imperial Oil. Most of the golds showed some strength, with the exception Imperial weakened to 8 while International Nickel improved on early loss to trade this afternoon at 11 1-4, unchanged. B. A. Oil was unchanged at 24.

Consolidated smelters moved up 2 points to 34 and Mining Corp. part of its morning advance selling at 13 unchanged. At 1-4 up 1-8, Hollinger was 3-8 stronger at 7 7-8 and Teck Hughes 5 cents firmer at 10 1-4, while Pond "A" lost ground to 4 1-2, off 1-2.

In the heavy industries, Massey Harris picked up a fraction, to 3, Lambs showed a fraction recovery and Steels 1-8 and Page was unchanged at 47.

LIVESTOCK

Toronto, March 22—Trading on the Toronto Livestock Market was light today with prices generally about steady with yesterday's close. Receipts on cattle were 100 light to make a market. Hogs were unsettled, Lambs steady.

Receipts were: Cattle four; Calves none; Hogs 30; Lambs 600; Sheep 40.

"The End of the Road" Will be Shown at Capitol Theatre

Separate Showings For Men And Women of Health Picture Dealing With Social Disease.

The Canadian Social Hygiene Council will bring the well known Venereal Disease propaganda picture, "The End of the Road" to Belleville at the Capitol Theatre next week. With the picture there will be additional educational features dealing with the anatomy and physiology of reproduction, detailing information as to the technical aspects of Venereal Diseases and also a full explanation of the value of medical examination before marriage.

The Canadian Social Hygiene Council is actively engaged in the carrying on health education work in all phases of health throughout the whole of Canada. The Council has as its aim the prevention of the need for prevention in order that the extremely high costs of unnecessary suffering, financial and otherwise to the Dominion may be avoided. While the cost of this work is only approximately four hundred million dollars it is startling that this vast cost of illness in Canada including the cost of maternity cases is estimated to reach nine times more than those sick annually every year, namely $1,311,000,000. The Council's publications state that 180,000 people 2 percent of the entire population, are constantly ill and unable to work. The Council has taken an interest in such matters as pasteurization of milk, prevention of Diphtheria, periodic health examination, and the establishment of County Health units.

The Council was responsible ten years ago for the establishment of the first grants for health purposes to be made by the Provinces, namely, the Venereal Disease grants amounting to as much as $300,000 a year. The work has been done continuously until this year, when the grants for the control of Venereal Disease cities of $100,000 was withdrawn from the Dominion Estimates, in addition to the grants for the Council's own activities.

It was hoped that a grant of $200,000 would be made by the Dominion Government to the provinces for the establishment of County Health units. This grant has not materialized as yet owing to the depression.

IMPROVEMENTS IN HARBOR TO COME

Questions of Storage, Dredging and Lighting Not Settled

Questions of additions to the dock warehouse, the provision of more storage space, the matter of dredging the harbor, and whether the lighting system will be installed on the Government wharf are still matters that will take a little time, according to Mr. C. P. Ostrom, Chairman of the Local Harbor Commission, who was questioned on Thursday.

"Nothing to say yet," he added, "all these matters are considered. Representatives have been made and it is probable that Friday work will go on right ahead when they once start."

CHARTER FOR LABOR ASSOC.

Local Body Discusses Many Problems at Meeting

With a charter pending, for which representations and negotiations and engagements have already been made, the Belleville Labor Association will operate in this city as a chartered organization. It was revealed at a meeting held in the hall last evening.

Financial backing and assistance in securing the promised charter has been given by prominent citizens, who as yet remains unnamed, according to Mr. W. A. Baldwin, president of the local association.

Probability of the formation of a Ratepayers' Association in the city, plans of which have already been started over the general election and property owners was voiced by Mr. Baldwin at Wednesday night's meeting. The formation of this association was urged by those present as a means of cutting down on relief costs now being borne by the individual. Such an association, it was urged, criticism of relief administration as at present applied in the city was aired.

Paying Assessments

Specific functions of the officials of the Central Relief Bureau were paying unnecessarily into other peoples' business, that neighbors existed in many cases in the subdivisions, and that a check on the workfirm existed, were made. Indifference of the public as a whole in the matter, overcharges on bills from merchants, and the recent added amount of several cents on many relief vouchers were brought forth by those present, while it was claimed to have received little satisfaction in the matter. A plan was attempted to bring it to the attention of the chairman of the Relief Bureau, and other officials. Starting funds for the Labor Association of the speaker will be presented to the City Council at their next regular meeting, and the Central Relief officials at their meeting held Friday night, in an endeavor in attendance in the hall last evening were asked to be present at both meetings.

In his capacity as Chairman of Labor, Alderman Benjamin Sale addressed the hundred or more members who were last night present, stating the fact that he was behind them in their activities.

Question of Hiring

The question of hiring men by the Belleville Labor Association was also brought up by Mr. T. Goddard, who claimed that the manner of hiring for city work was by favoritism, letter of preference on the part of the Chairman of Labor, and that this should be stopped, in the opinion of the speaker.

"Last year," he declared, "we had a chairman of Labor who was under council who didn't know what it was all about half the time. He has lost what little grip he had over of looking after the men. This year we have a chairman who means it's up to us to draw the matter to his attention."

Ald. Sale—"This matter of hiring men the way the foreman of each work is doing it is now was brought to the attention of the chairman of Labor, and he is present meeting. However, the chairman did not have the power to leave the matter of hiring the men to the foreman of each work on public works, as it had always been done. That's all the satisfaction I got."

Voice—"Haven't you got anything to say, Goddard?"

Goddard—"I grant that Mr. Henderson knows the men he wants to hire, and that the chairman of that department has the right to discharge but there's log of taxpayers running around the streets right now without any employment. Something should be done about this matter for the sake of the men. It should be done by means of a hiring hall; a list; in charge of it, the foreman found a man couldn't do the work, give him the authority to fire him."

Salaries for Council

Ex—Alderman Ben Sale was in favor of instituting a salary system for members of the City Council.

"Give them three dollars a night for their services in attending, it is ample," he suggested. "That will make them more prompt and regular in attendance."

The suggestion that a Ratepayers' Association be formed was also a suggestion from Mr. F. H. Henry, that two institutions of like nature would have to be formed. "One for the property owners themselves" he suggested, "and one for the unemployed."

Question of whether or not the new budget would affect relief payments was asked by Mr. Henry of Mr. Goddard. The matter is being considered by the Commission.

"Why not a tag day for the unemployed?" asked Mr. Henry. Then put to a vote of members present the tag day was carried. Later, however, on the amendment to the motion, another vote taken and the tag day idea, in favor of a minstrel program which will be put on by the Labor Association.

Lighting said to be circulated that officers of the Belleville Labor Association had voted themselves a weekly stipend was denied by President Baldree. "I'd like to see it," he declared.

Such an association, it was urged, criticism of relief administration as at present applied in the city was aired.

Paying Assessments

Specific functions of the officials of the Central Relief Bureau were paying unnecessarily into other peoples' business, that neighbors existed in many cases in the subdivisions, and that a check on the workfirm existed, were made. Indifference of the public as a whole in the matter, overcharges on bills from merchants, and the recent added amount of several cents on many relief vouchers were brought forth by those present, while it was claimed to have received little satisfaction in the matter. A plan was attempted to bring it to the attention of the chairman of the Relief Bureau, and other officials. Starting funds for the Labor Association of the speaker will be presented to the City Council at their next regular meeting, and the Central Relief officials at their meeting held Friday night, in an endeavor in attendance in the hall last evening were asked to be present at both meetings.

In his capacity as Chairman of Labor, Alderman Benjamin Sale addressed the hundred or more members who were last night present, stating the fact that he was behind them in their activities.

Question of Hiring

The question of hiring men by the Belleville Labor Association was also brought up by Mr. T. Goddard, who claimed that the manner of hiring for city work was by favoritism, letter of preference on the part of the Chairman of Labor, and that this should be stopped, in the opinion of the speaker.

"Last year," he declared, "we had a chairman of Labor who was under council who didn't know what it was all about half the time. He has lost what little grip he had over of looking after the men. This year we have a chairman who means it's up to us to draw the matter to his attention."

Ald. Sale—"This matter of hiring men the way the foreman of each work is doing it is now was brought to the attention of the chairman of Labor, and he is present meeting. However, the chairman did not have the power to leave the matter of hiring the men to the foreman of each work on public works, as it had always been done. That's all the satisfaction I got."

Voice—"Haven't you got anything to say, Goddard?"

Goddard—"I grant that Mr. Henderson knows the men he wants to hire, and that the chairman of that department has the right to discharge but there's log of taxpayers running around the streets right now without any employment. Something should be done about this matter for the sake of the men. It should be done by means of a hiring hall; a list; in charge of it, the foreman found a man couldn't do the work, give him the authority to fire him."

Salaries for Council

Ex—Alderman Ben Sale was in favor of instituting a salary system for members of the City Council.

"Give them three dollars a night for their services in attending, it is ample," he suggested. "That will make them more prompt and regular in attendance."

The suggestion that a Ratepayers' Association be formed was also a suggestion from Mr. F. H. Henry, that two institutions of like nature would have to be formed. "One for the property owners themselves" he suggested, "and one for the unemployed."

Question of whether or not the new budget would affect relief payments was asked by Mr. Henry of Mr. Goddard. The matter is being considered by the Commission.

"Why not a tag day for the unemployed?" asked Mr. Henry. Then put to a vote of members present the tag day was carried. Later, however, on the amendment to the motion, another vote taken and the tag day idea, in favor of a minstrel program which will be put on by the Labor Association.

Lighting said to be circulated that officers of the Belleville Labor Association had voted themselves a weekly stipend was denied by President Baldree. "I'd like to see it," he declared.

"HOW DO YOU DO."

"HOW DO YOU DO."

How to Acknowledge an Introduction

When you have been introduced, say, "How do you do". This is the accepted form of acknowledging an introduction. It is really all you need to introduction.

I'll grant you that these words mean little, used in this connection, and they don't even call for an answer; for the person at that moment, probably isn't concerned about how we "do". However, there are the words that must be said.

But—and this is the big but—these noncommittal words "How do you do" can be varied, and in that way liven up a pleasant voice—and

(By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman)

AT A TEA

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have received an invitation to a tea. I have never before attended a tea, so do not know what is expect or do. I do not know anyone who will be there, except the one in whose honor the tea is given.

I am never last the hostess. Naturally I feel sort of backward about going anywhere as I have never come out much in company.

1. Is there anything special one does or says on arriving?

2. Is it from four to six o'clock, also does one arrive at four and stay until six o'clock?

3. On the card just above the hostess' address, R.S.V.P. is printed. What does that mean?

4. I don't like tea.... Is it bad manners to refuse a drink if it is offered? What could I say?

5. If I decided not to go, must I write and tell her some time before hand? What should I say without hurting her feelings?

S.

Don't, I beg you, hesitate about going to this tea; for it is such charming social contact as this that will get you over your self-consciousness about mingling with people. And really a tea is one of the easiest things in the world to attend. Most people mingling and chatting, and the talk is so "shaky" about you that you can sit at once being quite at home. The great thing to remember is the determination to say the little things that so easily start a general conversation. Don't hesitate to start a conversation about the most obvious and casual of subjects.... Orchids and casual of subjects.... the weather as a subject is not considered a bore in conversation that it is supposed to be! I'd even like to mention them, for you can think up things to say before you go to the party. This may sound like superficial advice, but more often than not it is the way of doing it. Think of plays you've seen, movies you've enjoyed, books you've read, things of general interest that it might be possible to talk about at such a general party.

1. When you arrive you will be shown or directed to a room where you leave your wrap. Then you come to the room where the hostess and the guest of honor are receiving. Speak to the hostess, saying, "How do you do, Mrs. Allen. It was so nice of you to invite me this afternoon." If the guest of honor is standing near the hostess, she probably will quickly introduce you to the group standing near. When you see that other people are waiting to be received, you will speak to that with this group to whom you have been introduced, and later, if you wish, you may "circulate", going to the room in which the refreshments are being served or chatting with other groups.

When you leave you go first to your hostess, tell her what a happy time you have had, and say good-bye to her and to the guest of honor.

2. No. Go at any time that you wish between the hours, and stay for as long as you wish. For instance it would be well to arrive about five o'clock and leave at half part five or so.

3. R.S.V.P.'s the abbreviation standing for the French reminder that all your p's mean "Reply, if you please." Most invitations treat". This we do secretly, and I don't like that at all. I'd like to show off to my friends, and not meet him on corners. My mother is the only one who knows we go together.

4 There is no reason for you to take tea if you don't like it. At many teas now both tea and coffee are served, and so you'll have another choice. But don't feel shy about saying that you don't wish tea. A direct "No, thank you very much" is all you need to say.

5. Yes, since an answer is requested you should write as soon as you possibly can telling your hostess whether or not you can come. Give the real reason if you are sure that you have a previous engagement, but you are to be out of town, or whatever it is.

Advice to the Lovelorn

RIVAL HAS SNAPPY CAR AND ALLOWANCE

Dear Miss Fairfax:

As a steady reader of your column, what do you think of this? I am twenty-two, considered fairly good-looking, and for two years have been quite devoted to a girl whom we will call Marjorie. I have a fairly good job, steady but not brilliant. Lately my girl has been running around with some one who not only has a snappy car but a swell allowance from well-to-do parents. Loving this girl deeply, do you think I should step out of her life, or should I still try to win her back?

Questioning.

It's pretty hard to stand up against a rival who has a snappy car and plenty of money to buy theatre and dining parents. But is there a better way of spotting a young man and keeping him from a real success than by this method? As you say, you have been devoted to Marjorie. I can't see any reason for a sweeping change of personality. Be friendly when you meet, and don't complain of the rival under any circumstances. Be a good sport at heart. And, my dear boy, it is not necessary to have a car and all that sort of thing to be a success. Many young men with snappy cars, and plenty of pocket money often flounder hopelessly in the mire of life, while a thing should happen, there are many reasons.

S.

SHE "BAWLED HIM OUT"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been going with a boy about two months now. We both have known him for over two years. He formerly went with another girl, but now claims he is in love with me. About a week ago I was him with this other girl, and I got jealous and "bawled him out". He said he never took such a bawling out from any woman, and that his affections for me "cooled" because of the result of it. I told him I was sorry for what I said, but he has not treated me the same since.

Perhaps everyone has had the temptation to do a little "bawling out", at least once in a lifetime. But why people retract their privilege to say to the person because what's been said can't be unsaid, and the damage is done, I don't know, the unfortunate incident again. Perhaps this is the customary magic in healing things.

DUTCH TREATS AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The trouble with our romance is that I am standing for the French reminder that all your p's mean "Reply, if you please." Most invitations don't not require an answer, so when the hostess really wants to know how many guests to expect, she writes this R.S.V.P. on the invitation.

4. There is no reason for you to take tea if you don't like it. At many teas now both tea and coffee are served, and so you'll have another choice. But don't feel shy about saying that you don't wish tea. A direct "No, thank you very much" is all you need to say.

5. Yes, since an answer is requested you should write as soon as you possibly can telling your hostess whether or not you can come. Give the real reason if you are sure that you have a previous engagement, but you are to be out of town, or whatever it is.

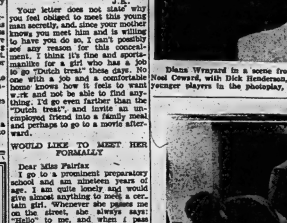
MAE WEST AT BELLE IN ROMANCE STORY OF OLD NEW YORK



"She Done Him Wrong", at the Belle Theatre tonight, and Friday, matinee and night, gives Belleville film patrons an idea of what the real Mae West is like when she is starring in a play of her own auth. ority. You had a glimpse of her in "Night After Night", where she virtually "stole" the picture, but it has remained for "She Done Him Wrong" to bring out the real Mae West, the Mae West Broadway knows. See her picture! It's a different kind of a treat and a glorious kind of a thrill.

Mae West, who wrote both the story and dialogue of "She Done Him Wrong", gives her role a brilliant and vivid treatment and put over her lines with a crackling spontaneity that speaks well for her own ability and that of Lowell Sherman, who directed. And her broadrendition of the favorite old ragtime ballad, "Frankie and Johnny" is something to get up and cheer about. Miss West also sings two brand new hit tunes, "Haven't Got No Place" and "Come Up and See Me" and "Easy to Love." Both songs with snappy cast, and plenty of pocket money often flounder hopelessly in the mire of life, while a thing should happen, there are many reasons.

Quite as effective as the brilliant Mae West is Cary Grant in the part which twists and turns in any number of surprising ways, for which succeeds in keeping perfectly logical. Miss West, as Lady Lou entertainer in a cabaret in New York's colorful white way, is the love interest of many who visit the cabaret. Her passion is diamonds and her current provider, as the film opens, is Noah Beery, proprietor of the cabaret and leader of a ring of counterfeiters. However, he has plenty of competition in Louis Landau, powerful political boss and Gilbert Roland, handsome Russian counterfeiter. But Lou has eyes only for Cary Grant, a crusading police captain.

A series of climaxes begins when the cabaret is raided by Dr. Hardy, an unknown detective who single-handed smashes the counterfeiting ring. During the raid, Lady Lou's life is threatened by Owen Moore, an escaped convict enamored of Lou, who believes he has doublecrossed him. The film reaches its dramatic ceiling as the identity of "The Shark" is revealed as he runs amuck.

Exceptional Short Cense.

"Cavalcade" in Kingston

"Cavalcade" the Fox Film presentation of Noel Coward's play, coming to the Belle, Saturday, for four days, has proven such a success in Kingston, this week, that the original four days booked for the attraction had to be extended to one week, to accommodate the crowds, wishing to see this screen masterpiece.

It is reported as the outstanding hit of recent years, and gives promise of outdoing some of the greatest creations of screen history. The featured roles are played by Diana Wynyard and Clive Brook with Ursula Jeans, Hubert Mundin, Frank Lawton, Irene Browne and Beryl Mercer in the leading supporting roles.

WILL INCREASE REVENUE

Milwaukee, Wis., March 23—(AP) —The return of real beer will increase by the Milwaukee water department's annual revenue by more than $50,000, Henry P. Johnson, superintendent of water works said. He said he believed the breweries would use 1,500,000,000 gallons of water a year.

"ROME EXPRESS" ARRIVED TODAY AT CAPITOL THEATRE

When the British film "Rome Express" opened at the new Roxy Theatre in Radio City recently, New York's critics declared that "Zoglabad has made a better picture than 'Grand Hotel' and 'Shanghai Express' combined," and the New York populace responded by jamming the mammoth Roxy to capacity. Such acclaim has never greeted a British film in the United States previously, but since the opening of the tremendous $1,250,000 Clamount-British studio near London, the United States has recognized that British films are not to be derided.

"Rome Express" opens at the Capitol theatre today for three days and promises to take the people of Belleville on the most exciting journey they have ever experienced. The entire action of the picture takes place on a luxury train speeding from Paris to Rome. In the station at Paris we see the passengers take leave of their friends and board the train. The express starts on its exciting way. We become involved in the series of thrilling episodes that occur as the train speeds through the night.

The plot develops rapidly as we see a millionaire philanthropist steal a priceless painting—a beautiful screen actress meet her former sweetheart—a strange super-criminal make terrible his threats—discover the scandal of an eloping married couple threatens to become public when they are accused of murder—an famous French detective off to Rome for a holiday is suddenly faced by the most baffling mystery of his career—a cringing secretary demands justice from his employer—a nervous specialist is driven almost mad-ing by customs officials—a conductor is murdered in his dining car poker game—a publicity agent is fired by his actress employer—the handsome train thief falls in love—and the express roars on through the night on the "Rome Express" and becomes involved in the thrilling tale.

Watching "Rome Express" the audience becomes passengers and participants in the adventures of their train companions. The production is so realistic that "Rome Express" as Britain's answer to the all-star "Grand Hotel" is the biggest piece of international stage ever assembled in a single picture appeal. I don't know of a picture in which film is the equal in acting, in direction, in backgrounds, in entertainment merit of any picture ever produced in Great Britain. The screen critic of the New York News said "You can't help enjoying 'Rome Express'" and that all characters are so real and the fast pace so gripping, that you don't leave the train from the time the express enter in Paris until you arrive in Rome, but what adventure and excitement you travel on your train.

The screen critic of the London Express said "The highbrows will appreciate the fine direction, clever technique and fine acting and everybody else will appreciate the sheer quality will enjoy the intrigue, thrills and entertainment of the acting and the brilliant flashes of humor. Rome Express is for Britain's express to the higher honors of thinkers. "Rome Express" is going to carry Britain's flame to the top."

"Rome Express" undoubtedly opens a new chapter in British film history. Never has so much energy been devoted to star any particular player but in the case of Jo Jo Zoglabad the efforts of an exceptionally gifted cast superbly co-ordinated by the director, Walter Forde. You'll want to see "Rome Express" more than once and your enjoyment will be increased with each journey.

"Rome Express" comes to the Capitol direct from the mammoth new Roxy Theatre in Radio City and opens at the Capitol Theatre today.

All aboard for "Rome Express" today at regular Capitol prices!

SON OF THE GODS

By Rex Beach

"What!"

"Precious pally fish I could stand my ever and merry him. I wish I knew why I hate him—guilty fish don't have grit, do they? Nothing to hold it by."

"You couldn't do that, not after what I'm going to tell you. I have a notion of standing between you and the wrath of mother's cause to see, as sounds awfully hackneyed to say he hasn't a chance. He's not a fool nor a robber. He has gone to smash. He's a gambler, a drunkard."

"Darling! You tempt me to duty by your fears."

"I got the surprise of my life that night I went down to the docks. I always figured he had some pride and decency; I assumed he was, a gentleman, whatever that may be, but he isn't. D'you know where I found him? In a Filipino dance hall! The most terrible place I ever saw."

"Yes? Where? Tell me about it."

"George insisted willing; acknowledged his request in considerable detail he described not only that low-down Riverside Drive as he called it but also the other haunts he had visited in company with Senator Vail. The picture he painted was vivid enough; Alanna listened with interest. When he had finished she sighed and kissed her fiancé by way of reward.

"I wonder if it's any worse than I've been told? Perhaps it's those colored dance halls in Harlem."

"Did...you go?" Wagner gasped.

"Yes. I went everywhere; tried everything, but it didn't work. What is doing the same? I know all about it. I hear every day. One can't jump at conclusions. I haven't spoken to him and I don't intend to."

"Then you—"

"He asked a friend to telephone the nurse and report to him on my condition. He couldn't do it himself, could he? Well, I got her on the 'phone finally...after I'd sent for you to wire—and we've become good friends. She was here to see me this afternoon. I think she's in love with him, too, so we have plenty to talk about."

After a moment Wagner said more cautiously, with the utmost severity of feeling:

"I'm awfully sorry, dear. You don't know how miserable it makes me to see you so unhappy. I'm not what are we going to do about it? Nothing. I wish I could help you think the thing through, but I can't."

I broke it up once in the only way I could. I'm not proud of it, nearly, but you and Sam spoiled it. Let's just talk and forget it. Sit down along now, and amuse yourself. Please!"

"The father began a protest but she insisted. "Scuttle off to your club or go and see the second act of some show. I'm tired and I'd rather be alone. Honestly I am."

"Very well." Wagner stopped and kissed the thin, listless face of his daughter. "I'd like to help you think it out, if I could and if you'd let me."

After a while Alanna tried to read, but the book was heavy; her eyelids were heavy, too, and her brain was heavy. She was tired all over, and yet the doctor pronounced her well. Her telephone rang and with an effort she lifted it. Eileen Cassidy was calling her but in such a flutter of excitement that Alanna did not at first recognize her voice. Even then it was hard to understand anything Eileen Cassidy said. Eileen Cassidy girl was plainly crackbrained at a hatter; there was no sense at all to what she was saying. A while mon? Sam a while man? The poor child was daft. Historical too, for her voice was shrill, she was laughing and choking and her words fairly piled up on the wire. Alanna was not sure but what one of Chinese importer was not his father.....

No, Eileen was probably all right. It was merely her own reason that she'd lost.

Alanna flung dizzily to the instrument; her mouth turned dry and she could utter nothing except broken and inadequate sounds; her ears began to roar until she completely lost what was being said to her.

"Wait! Please...If the manager to gasp, I can't understand.

hallo of it. Say it over again slowly.'

Eileen Cassidy's voice was not at all practically that. Anyhow he isn't Lee Ying's name.

"I can't believe it. How do you know?"

"By the strangest thing. We were having a party in my room in honor of mother's cause to see us, tonight, he's here now. His name is Lee Ying, Dan Lee Ying. He's your father when he was a Police Commissioner. Well, Commissioner Lee Ying came from here and Lee Ying came from there and they says Sam was a foundling. Lee Ying found him in a box. He was in Chinatown when he was no bigger than your hand. Isn't that queer? That explains everything, doesn't it? I mean about Sam's looks and—Hello! Hello! Are you there?"

"Yes."

"Did you hear?"

"I think so. What does he say?"

"Lee Ying? Why don't he tell me?"

"He doesn't know. I called his home a couple minute ago and he's out. They're all out."

"Are you sure?"

"What the hell! Good Heavens, yes! That's why I'm so frantic to find him. I called Peter Ying during the first thing in the morning and he promised to get right over but after hitting it up somewhere, I suppose. He hadn't showed up at 10 o'clock so he must still hale, nay not at all. He was in no condition to leave home."

"Yes. Yes, of course. Father must know too.....Could you tell him? Is he here right away? Shall I tell him?.....I'm shaking so I can't hold on.....

Alanna did not remember who had the last word because for both she completely lost control or her faculties. She could not tell how it ended, she sintered and she choked; she heard Eileen Cassidy's voice faint at the telephone even after she had replaced the receiver on its hook.

"Sam's mother died when he was just long, but it served to given-her her hide something like her self and she began to dress for the street. Almost before she realized why. Tears were still flowing and she was sobbing, but she was fumbling her mirror and pulled her hat straight. Her face was white and nightmare had ended. She'd find him. He was probably at his club. Or perhaps he'd gone to thanks to her father she knew exactly where he was. She must hurry! Why did those taxis keep screaming? Nothing to do but wait. Nothing to do but to cry about it. Sam was a foundling, a poor wee sponge. Out all night in Chinatown with those yellow ball girls, eh? Indeed! Shed snatch him away! If she had to be rude to do it. She wouldn't be the first time she was. Yes, and if he ever dared to touch another girl, she'd—she'd fix him. The dissolute wretch! The darling! What was Lee Ying doing? Were warriors who rode out and seized their men and brought them in across their saddles? Amazons!

Her father's circumstantial description of that Asiatic Club enabled her to find it without difficulty but it was a long time admitted finally enough. When she arrived there. The smiling Oriental in the door told her that Sam Lee was inside.

From the floor above came a babel of voices and the sounds of a restless, moving crowd. There was a reception room at the right of the entrance and a white door with a sign over it, smoking lounge, and there several Filipinos were grouped around a white girl: they were talking animatedly. Alanna paused in the doorway and looked in; the current eager faces towards her and when she moved on toward the stairway a couple of them followed her.

An orchestra started playing, the dancing floor was filled with couples when the visitor mounted to its level; she pressed forward until a Chinese waiter stopped her and asked her. "There was an air of authority about him and the rightly assumed him to be the manager.

"Right!" he said. "You desire seeing me?"

"Yes. I'm looking for Sam Lee."

The fellow eyed her inquiringly. "Lee? You friend of Mister Sam Lee? You acquaintance...or Mister Sam Lee?"

Alanna nodded impatiently, eagerly she scanned the moving throng. Her pursuers were in the smoking room were at her side now and both men were asking her to dance; she ignored them and spoke again to the manager.

"I must see him at once. Tell me where he is."

"What you come here for? Maybe you representing Police Department? Every evening there is confused excellently."

"No sir! I'm a friend of Mr. Lee's and I must speak to him."

"Sir? No sir. I don't see him to-night."

"But I'm sure he's here. The man at the door just told me—"

"Mister Sam Lee is not here."

The conversation had been carried on not without difficulty for Alanna's Filipino admirers were insistent and they continually interrupted her; other patrons, too, were attracted by her appearance for she was pretty, she was young, she was new. Several men not all of whom were Filipinos, came in; there sprang up an eager rivalry for her favor. Alanna was accustomed to servility from Asiatic men, but this was unusual. Feeling fine, too. How silly of her to faint.

"Sam!" she broke out. "You're white! White! That's why I went there."

"Yes, yes! We'll be home in a minute."

"I'm all right honestly! I couldn't wait to tell you and—Lee, Sam is sailing in the morning so I had to hurry. There's nothing to it. There's no barrier at all. Oh, Sam! Sam! You're not Lee Ying's son. It's a mistake. You're white, white, white! Don't you understand?"

The listener was aghast. This was dreadful. Poor sick child! And they had told her! Who had told her? Liars! "I understand," he said soothingly. "But, honestly, you're upsetting yourself. Close your eyes, we'll be there in a jiffy."

"No, no! Listen to me." Alanna struggled out of his arms, spilled words pouring from her lips, there was a whiteness in her cheeks and in her breathless haste told its own pitiful story. She clutched at him and he caught her hands, stopped her while something about Eileen Cassidy, a girl she knew at Hillcrest School, Lee Ying, a white baby.....

How could he explain where he encountered Alanna? Questions like these raced through Sam's mind. It was bad enough to find her in Lee Ying's room, but this, was ten times worse. In a wee he was relieved to realize that one corner of her mind, otherwise his shame at being discovered would have overwhelmed him.

Escape from the hotel would take some explaining, he fancied. Wagner was probably frantic. The whole thing was too unfortunate, too dreadful to think about. For instance, that crazy idea that Lee Ying, her. Well, he had saved her reason once, perhaps.....

He pricked up his ears and turned a startled face toward them for she had ceased her gibberish and was speaking to him in a normal, conversational tone.

"Sam! Quit shaking me. If you don't stop treating me like a lunatic I—I'll set out a yell. I'm not delirious I'm as sane as you are. Now Think that over for a minute. Look at me!.... Do I look demented!.. All right. I'm trying to tell you something of the greatest importance to both of us and it won't register. It doesn't, I'm sure, sound too dramatic for any tea but it's true."

Alanna!" he cried in a choking voice, "If you're not out or your mind I'll—I'll—"

"That's better! I was getting mad by the minute. I thought you'd go up in the air, but—the whole thing is a blunder. Now then, I'll give it to you in a medicine dropper take it slowly. A relative of Eileen Cassidy's, by the name of Daly, is in New York and he decides you're no more a Chinese than he is.

"Absurd! I can't believe it! What proof is there?"

"Proof enough, if fancy we'll find out when we get to Hillcrest. All I can do is repeat what she told me over the telephone."

This the speaker proceeded to do and by the time she had finished they had arrived at their destination. In a daze Sam paid the driver and assisted Alanna into the hotel; he felt sure that the hallucination would be broken at any moment.

It was a half hour later. In the parlour of the hotel Alanna, Mr. Peter Daly, spurred on by Eileen, had told his story in minutes detail and one of his listeners had followed it word for word that Albert Wagner. The speaker concluded by saying:

"There's no possible doubt about it. Dunne gave me his report on it at Hong Kong, and we talked it over how he saw Lee Ying pick the little baby up on the side day and how the old man and his wife insisted that he had been sent in answer to their prayers. Dunne is still alive, he'll be glad to verify everything I've said, Mr. Wagner, you're a friend of Lee Ying's, a Chinese; they put great faith in their gods—the good ones do, and Lee Ying is one. He and his wife were uncommonly religious. Ryt. Dunne was there when they got enough to prove what I'm telling you. It's no mistake."

Eileen offered substantiation by declaring that Lee Ying's name, I mean Lee Ying—better than anybody, He was my dearest friend. He always called Sam a "lion of the Montgomery, the other of the girls' Sunday school class was there and joined in with the games. Correspondence was the convener of the program and she with Miss Ila Bell will be the lunch committee.

The Ladies' Aid sponsored a hard time social on Wednesday evening, the church parlors were filled with young and old, dressed in hard times. Pouliter, in the chair, called on the first number on the programme, an Irish prologue by Lois Sharpe, given so beautifully and then Mr. Pouliter talked a few minutes. A catchy song by Dorothy Haggarth was well rendered and then three lads in hard time costumes, Billy Mitchell, Theodore Foster and Terrance Read sang an Irish Lullaby. An splendid reading and history of St. Patrick was oratorically given by Elmo Cole and this was followed by an Irish song by Douglas Scarbrough, for which he was encored. A visiting guest from Bloomfield, Ila Shaw, entertained with her reading of "Love Scenes" and "Medication." Clifford Rogers sang an Irish song accompanied by his son, Douglas on violin and Mrs. Rowe at the piano. An unusual number, a monologue "The Flapper at the Telephone" was given by Dorothy McColl. A modern quiet girl at the telephone with the telephone book in her hand and called her number in a perfectly natural manner and talked to her boy friends and girl pals, which brought her audience to laughter. A musical and vocal number by three boys, Bill Peet, Henry Forsythe and John Petrie, accompanied by a guitar played by Petrie. A reading "Each Time" was given by Mrs. R. L. Terrill. Hamborne of Bridge-on Grove. About twenty-five ladies were there to enjoy the meeting in charge of Mrs. Ashley, the president. Business was transacted and then Mrs. Orvis, the convener of the program took the chair and asked the Lilac Song Committee to continue their award the program. After singing Irish songs Miss Who were, of Irish descent, were asked to stand and tell something of their ancestors. A paper was given by Mrs. Lydia Nelson entitled "What Ireland Has Given to the World." The history of Ireland, the island which lies southwest of Scotland, dates back to the time of the Greeks and Romans. It is about 302 miles in length and 180 miles in breadth. For the most part it is an agricultural country, but few of those know about Irish linen manufactured, exclusively by the Carrickmacross lace, which is made by the peasants of Ireland." The fishing industry is quite extensive but has diminished in late years. As far as natural advantages are concerned for commerce and shipping Ireland is scarcely rivalled by any other country. Her coast is not only surrounded by safe anchorages but so deeply indented by bays and inlets that no part is more than 34 miles from water communication with the sea.

We all know about the Giant's Causeway, that natural pier or basalt, in the form of six-sided columns, extending from the coast of Antrim into North Channel. "Legends tell us it was the commencement of a road constructed by giants across the channel to Scotland. We find that some of the great poets were Irishmen, William Yeats, who wrote fairy and folk tales; legends and lyrics; Countess Kathleen as well as many others. Our paper would not be complete, not to mention some of the old Irish songs. "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," "Come Back to Erin," "Mavourneen," etc. Coming down almost to our own times we find the names of the great Irish statesman, Daniel O'Connell. Charles Stewart and Parnell, who have done much for their country and the world, and who can beat the Irish for wit and humor?"

Interesting contest was arranged by Mrs. S. L. Terrill, name St. Patrick's eleven letters, Miss Shaw of Bloomfield, gave a reading, "The Old Cabin-Sealed Chair," Alfred Gooding, of five years, gave a recitation. Refreshments were served by the lunch committee and the hostess.

On Friday evening, March 17th, St. Patrick's Day, Rev. and Mrs. Pouliter entertained thirty guests at the parsonage. HAVE PAID ONE HUNDREDTH CONSECUTIVE DIVIDEND

Annual Meeting of Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada Limited

An Unbroken Dividend Record Has Been Maintained Since Company's Incorporation in 1912.

Has Wide Important Connections in Canada Which Dovetail

A Lesser In Welfare Work for Employees

The efficiency of the management, the financial strength of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada Limited, and the quality of the service it renders to the public of Canada, may alike be measured by the remarkably satisfactory statement embodied in the shareholders' report to the annual meeting of the company in Montreal on March 14th. Since the company's incorporation twenty years ago, one hundred dividends have been paid. This record is unique in Canada in these general times. Considering the period through which the business has grown over has been passing in the last three years, it is more than ordinarily so.

The directors is presenting their report covering the last profit for the year ending December 31st last amounted to $6,471,171, after paying 8% dividends on the preferred stock and 7% on the common stock, a surplus on the year's operations of $1,165,986 was carried forward. This added to the previous surplus of $7,763,000, less "final" or bonus dividend on prior year of $1,553,931, gives a total balance carried forward of $7,875,056. Total assets of the Company as on December 31, 1932, amounted to $69,059,561.

Promotion for Many Years

Many of the products of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada Limited have been household words in Canadian smokers for two generations. For example, "Old Chum" pipe tobacco was introduced in 1895, and enjoys to-day, greater favor than ever, an immense popularity. Another name remembered by two generations is that of Sergeant Major Sweet, which was introduced in 1898. Corporal cigarettes introduced to the Canadian public in 1887, and still holding favour with a large and growing number of the public.

Canada Wide Distribution

The products of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada Limited have Canada-wide distribution. Imperial Bank of Canada heavily household words throughout the Dominion. Who has not heard of Old Chum Tobacco, Pocket Tobacco, Tuxed Cigarettes, Flavour Cigarettes, Winchester Cigarettes, Beehive Cigarettes, Imperial Cut Plug, etc. the well known names? Practically every tobacconist, every cigar dealer, every hotel and restaurant, every news agent on the trains, carries Imperial brands. They are "for sale everywhere."

Canadian Tobacco Growing

One of the developments of recent years to which the Imperial Tobacco Company has lent its assistance and given direction is that of tobacco growing in this country.

Several years ago, the Company, having conducted investigations as to the most suitable part of Canada for the cultivation of tobacco, selected the Western peninsula of Ontario as the most favourably favourable, particularly the district along the shore of Lake Erie in the Counties of Essex and Kent. Here conditions of soil and climate were found to be similar to those similar indeed to those of North Carolina. A beginning had already been made with Burley. Burley tobacco seed was imported from Kentucky in 1885. Information as to the most approved modern methods of preparing seed beds, transplanting, fertilizing, harvesting and curing was gathered, printed and supplied to local farmers by the Company. As a result the cultivation of Burley tobacco of high quality has reached a point where it is now a major crop of this district, and a desirable source of income for the growers. It is now no longer necessary to import Burley for Canadian requirements. And the equal is fast fcimerly imported is now grown, cured and matured successfully in Canada.

The Company did not stop with Burley, however. They next turned attention to Virginia Bright, Similar procedure was followed to encourage the growth of a grade of tobacco known in the Southern States as "fin-cured Virginia Bright." This is a medium more delicate kind of tobacco to produce and handle. It requires a considerable larger capital investment in barns and the necessity of specially constructed curing barns.

Reclaim Waste Sand Farms

In the southwestern county of Norfolk certain sections of light sandy land, now unprofitable for mixed farming, had been abandoned. On investigation, the soils of these districts were found peculiarly well suited to the growing of Virginia Bright. Experience has been that many abandoned farms have been reclaimed and thousands of acres in Norfolk County have greatly enhanced in value. More than twenty-five million pounds of the type of tobacco are now grown in Ontario annually, the great proportion of which is grown in the County of Norfolk.

To sort, grade, dry, store and mature the Canadian tobacco in preparatory to its manufacture, the Imperial Tobacco Company has established two extensive re-handling plants, one in Farnington, Essex County, and the other at Delhi in Norfolk County. These plants, through which is handled annually about 30 million pounds of tobacco

Belleville Teams Qualify for Playoffs in District Loop in Well Played Games

'Oilmen' Defeat Cobourg 6-3 With A Hectic Third Period

POLICE INTERVENE

Grills' Garage Apply White Wash Brush to Frankford 6-0

Four players were ruthed from the ice by the police following a general free-for-all fight in which both benches cleared during the third period when the Belleville Oilers were attempting to overcome a two-goal lead in the competition and keep themselves of first position in the Group A, of the O.H.A. Intermediate League, the 'Oilmen' coming from behind to win the game by 6 to 3 over the Grills' Garage outfit. Belleville defeated the Frankford aggregation by a score of 6 to 0 in the opening Wednesday night game.

Referee—Jack Campbell and Ernie of the Cobourg Club and Maxie Dafoe of the Oilers' team were also removed from the ice by Chief Constable Hall, but Referee Jack Jeffrey Truelach had called for the assistance of the police before the players of both clubs milled together, although with the exception of a few minor scrapes, the trouble had not brewing all evening when high sticking and many fiery exchanges were injected into the game throughout with the referee having to step in times. Even as early as the first period Referee Truelach had to order from the ice and refused to continue following a penalty being handed to Cecil Hayes after the latter had used foul language on the referee. Previous to this incident Referee Truelach had banished Hayes and Ted McDonald to the dressing room with his referee. Manager Gerald Gerald also left the bench on a hockey club later used abusive language to the official and was given a penalty. In the third period Manager Gerald pulled his club from the ice and both clubs retired to their dressing rooms while the 800-odd patrons settled themselves for the decision. President H. Jacobs of the Oilers' Club entered the ice and after clarifying the situation resumed hostilities after a protracted wrangle until the final moment of the game. 18 penalties were meted out during the thirty minutes.

Belleville

Baker, the alternate defence man, was by far the most valuable player on the fight as he deliberately refused to mix with the fray with his stick while trying to keep his way through the crowd. He also dropped his stick and tested Baker for a ten round scrap. Baker refused to accept the action and took a well known position at Maple Leaf Gardens and stood straight and every player on the ice deserted the fight and made a bee line for a spot to swing at an opposing player and all 40 men on the ice were milled and rolled on the ice and order was not restored until the police called the ice and took four of the players into the office of the club where their names and addresses were taken and charges laid against them all a severe lecture. Baker, who was the instigator of the whole affair, was the only casualty as he disappeared from the scene of action and as near as could be learned all players removed from the ice were allowed to proceed to their respective dressing rooms.

The Oilers' game saw the Oilers' service team run amuck and score three goal in the first frame before Coach Gerald Gerald replaced the regulars on a pass from Hicoll with Ted McDonald. Day then went on to make it 2 to 0 while Hicoll added another to the credit of the service team. Hicoll opened the second period with a neat piece of play when he pounced on the puck on a face-off in front of Coburg and shot the rubber completely around to score the goal. The visitors came back with a rush in front of the cards and Gerald stepped past Dafoe to score. Dafoe repaid and duplicate this feat on Day's pass. To open the third period the Coburg team made a determined rush and Gerald when Gerald registered on Chandler's pass. Dafoe batted the rubber past Morgan and MacDonald were by the time the Oilers had time to line up while the second line of Nicoll, Mc-Clelland and Weir got plenty of action. Sherry and Rigby stopped Hicoll all but scored and Weir had been seen to much better advantage in the net. However, he polished off some good saves.

For the losing team but three players didn't beat off Billy by a mile, but he did a good enough job to convince the timekeeper.

Canzoneri sat at the ringside and watched it apparently had. Lahti expected much of Ross, for he said the 32 year old Chicagoan had surrendered.

"He's a good boy," said the champion. "He won my by himself. He outboxed Billy and hurt him several times. I'll be glad to meet him.

Although the feelhers of Mike may be either white or black, Lahti's skin is always black. They are the negroes of the fowl race.

A statement from Cortell University was that while calf, beef and pig liver differ in price, they are practically equal in food value.

OPENING TILT

The opening game saw Waller and Dillon "goalkicker" draw a rather faulty start in the first period while with the Frankford Millers by the score of 3 to 0. The win puts the locals in first place in Group B, a tie with the Maple Tyings Jacrols.

For the winners the two defence men, Connors and Carl Morgan, were perhaps the pick of all the players on the ice, both aggressive and defensively, while the starting line of Kenny Canning, Cy Barrington and Jack Canning worked together too much speed and combination for the Millers. The losing club was minus the services of their goaltender defence man, Charlie O'Malley which handicapped them somewhat in the net, but Dillon was undoubtedly the star of the night as he thwarted many sure scores. The second line of Jones, Finnigan and Sturk looked the best.

No score was registered in the first period while Rap Day barged one on a pass from Walsh early in the second frame, and Carl Morgan made it 2-0 on a pass from Bell in the third. In the final chukker the locals ran wild and scored four times in short order, Barrington collared on J. Canning's pass, Walsh on Miller's combination play, Barrage on Connor's pass and Carl Morgan ended the scoring with a solo rush.

Two more games are scheduled in this league for Friday night when the Campbellford Maroons and the Trenton Imperials battle for the right to meet the local entry in Group A—play offs, with Trenton meeting the Millers in the curtain-raiser.

The line-up:

Grills' Garage — Goal, Sinfield; defence, Connors and Carl Morgan; centre, H. Canning; wings, J. Canning and Barrington; subs, Walsh, Miller, T. Day and Rap Day.

Millers—Goal, Dillon; defence, O'Malley and Ackers; centre, A. Prestidge; wings, G. Prestidge and Walker; subs, Finnigan, Burtt; Milne, Jordan and Odell.

Referee—Jack Truelach, Belleville

Summary:

First Period

Belleville—Walsh (Miller) . . . 3.30

BARNEY ROSS IN LIMELIGHT

Will Get Shot at Crown of Lightweight Tony Canzoneri

BY WILLIAM WEEKES
Associated Press Sports Writer

Chicago, March 22—Barney Ross, Jewish lightweight from Chicago's Ghetto, has earned himself a chance at Tony Canzoneri's world lightweight championship.

By outpointing Billy Petrolle the Fargo, N.D., old gentleman, who has been the yardstick by which lightweight contenders are measured last night in the Chicago Stadium, Ross certified himself as about the best in the field seeking to dethrone the champion.

Ross didn't beat old Billy by a mile, but he did a good enough job to convince the timekeeper.

Canzoneri sat at the ringside and watched it apparently had. Lahti expected much of Ross, for he said the 32 year old Chicagoan had surrendered.

"He's a good boy," said the champion. "He won my by himself. He outboxed Billy and hurt him several times. I'll be glad to meet him.

Knocks and Boosts

A rather novel idea to stimulate interest among the younger members at the Y.M.C.A. has been hit upon by Physical Director Jack Morden, who introduced ink new plan to the boys and junior classes last Saturday morning. Each Saturday morning during the regular classes, when the boys and juniors take to the floor for basketball, there is one track and one field event. All boys are permitted to take each event with the distance or time, as the case may be, being kept with the winner being announced from the clerk's desk more than the usual interest is being taken by the school children in the competition.

Last Saturday morning Hilly George Mills was clocked in the 40 yard dash, around the saucer track, at exactly seven and three-fifth seconds. We have seen better than that, Hilly, in bed, but the best ever hung up over the local "Y" track. Tweag Mills topped four feet 2 1-2 inches in the broad jump. We understand in the junior class yet, but according to these figures, has a future ahead of him in the track and field events. In the prep events Willie Redmon was the broad jump, while Raymond Dehn ran away with the 60 yard dash honors.

Instructor Morden will test the kids with a potato race and the sled-pull this coming Saturday. The idea is quite a novel one in that it gives the youngsters a chance to learn the rudiments of the track and field game before they attain a mature age.

Early yesterday the Tweed intermediates decided, owing to the cold snap, to postpone, and not to participate in the local postseason league, later in the day the players got Mr. H. Murphy to sponsor the club and they are now back in the running. In order to make up for missing last night's tilt the Tweed club will be called upon to play a double-header next Wednesday night. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights this week every "Y" game will be played in the loop with three games being played each night. Bobby "Bouncer" Selway has been named as the official in charge for Friday night's double header.

Federal Attorney George Z. Medalie, his chief assistant, Thomas E. Dewey, and a staff of Federal Attorney Murray Gurfein prosecuted to the Grand Jury here over the charge that Mitchell by selling to his wife 1,000 shares of stock in Richer bought back and wilfully evaded an income tax of $657,152 in 1928.

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings said the indictments and Medalie's would "proceed forthwith to present the case to a Grand Jury with a view to pressing for an early trial."

Mitchell, who resigned last month as chairman of the National City Bank, was sitting among the rich furnishings of his Fifth Avenue home when United States Marshal entered.

Tacoma is an Indian word meaning highest or near heaven.

We cannot say that we blame "Mace" Rigby for his actions during the melee as player Barker deliberately and shocked him across the face. Had the other participants been interfered the out-break would have died a sudden death but, the players evidently were looking for trouble when the referee separated them, "stepped up to the trough". (Let the chips fall where they may).

Naturally we were sorry to see the police have to quell the uprising but it was the only way to teach the players, that they can't take matters in their own hands and start a free-for-all tilt just when and where they choose. This is the second of such out-breaks in less than two weeks with the Cobourg champs being implicated both times. Although the patrons howl with glee during the free-for-alls at hockey matches it naturally follows that such proceedings only go to give the game the well known "black eye"

Two more games are scheduled for this loop on Friday night, when the Campbellford Maroons and the Trenton "Imperials" head-up in the night-cap affair with the winner meeting the Cities Service in the play-off series. As a matter of fact if the "Imperials" can but beat the Maroons they will be in second position as they are one point ahead of the latter team at present. The Tweed club made their initial appearance, after once dropping out of the league, against the Frankford "Millers" in the opening game.

BANKER HELD TO EVASION

New York, March 21 (AP)—Less than 24 hours after his arrest was ordered by the Attorney General in Washington, Charles E. Mitchell, former chairman of the National City Bank, entered on a charge of income tax evasion, went into Federal Grand Jury room.

Federal Attorney George Z. Medalie, his chief assistant, Thomas E. Dewey, and a staff of Federal Attorney Murray Gurfein prosecuted to the Grand Jury here over the charge that Mitchell by selling to his wife 1,000 shares of stock in Richer bought back and wilfully evaded an income tax of $657,152 in 1928.

REDMEN WIN 1-0 IN GREAT HOCKEY GAME

Breaks Favor Newmarket In Close Checking Contest

PLAY OTTAWA

Normie Mann Scores on Shot, That Just Dribbles in

(By Elmer Dalmage, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, March 22 (CP)—Newmarket Redmen, who fog nothing but favors along a trail, that has been pretty hungry, are top-heavy favorites for the Memorial Cup finals today, and it is even remarked they should get that far without further assists of support from Lady Luck.

Defenders of the Canadian junior hockey championship, Sudbury Wolves held the Redmen to even terms in the deciding game of the annual north-south series before a crowd of 14,000 here last night only five minutes of play remained.

Then Bill Dorman in the Sudbury nets fumbled a line drive with his flashing right hand and the red shirts had suddenly scanned a 1-0 lead which they retained. Normie Mann, first-string Newmarket centre, fired the scoring shot.

Herbage Dorman made fewer mistakes in the three-game series than any other player since Hap Day, Toronto's Newmarket's goalie, who had none. He played sensationally when his team won the first game 1-0 and was equally as brilliant when they dropped the second 3-1. But his fumble was the deciding factor in a battle that could only have been decided by a break.

The Sudbury defence matched that with this shot which struck high behind the goal, dropped down on the top of the net and bounced into the cage via the backdoor, off the goalie's back, eliminating Toronto Nationals.

Stratford Midgets were downed in the O.H.A. finals by a succession of old-time tactics. The Redmen couldn't very well help and would not have. The drive last night looked like a dozen or so other jabs from the blue line that Dorman had picked off with ease. He scored this one with his hand but the rubber bumped out of the glove, struck his arm and rolled back into the cage.

The win qualified Newmarket to play Ottawa Senators here Thursday and at Ottawa Tuesday in a two-game, total goal series.

MARITIMES TO FORE IN PLAYDOWNS

Moncton Hawks and Red Indians on Way Up

Toronto, March 22 (CP)— The Canadian Olympic Hockey Board has decided Maritime title today while the Moncton Hawks, Allan Cup title holder is also recorded, following games here Tuesday night. Moncton Hawks qualified for the finals, when they defeated Montreal Royals 3-2, to take the round 5 to 4 while the Red Indians from the same city won the event, defeating the Saint John six in the saw first series, following-up with a 5-2 win over Sussex Royals.

The second and last of Canada's champions, Sudbury Cub Wolves—dropped into—discard when they lost to the Toronto Newmarket Juniors in the third and final game of their series for the Memorial Cup title.

Boasting one of the strongest line-ups ever assembled in the province, the Wolves had no competete masters over their opponents in all but the first period. Their first game victory, a 1-0 decision in the first game, was sliced in half in the third stanza, but they got even this back near the end of the next period and added a pair in the final to clinch the verdict.

Their opponents in the finals will come from either Ottawa, Hamilton or Niagara Falls. The latter two clubs battle tonight, counting the game with a two goal advantage Ottawa gained in the game. The survivors of this set-to will clash with Ottawa in the Hawks' rivals for the Eastern Canada title.

Defeat of the Sudbury boys by Red Indians will try conclusion again Friday night, sending the odd goal, that will be played on the finals against the Ontario representatives.

Coach Hamilton will now try and accomplished what various others have failed to do—stop the Newmarket Redmen. Subjected to one of the most powerful gridds, any minor scrutede has ever undergone, Redmen have come from behind to win every occasion they win. The first game will be played tomorrow night and if necessary the second game at Ottawa the following Tuesday, total goals to decide the winner.

Penny-in-the-slot machines are turning a slip of paper with the weather forecast for the next 24 hours are to be erected in Frankfort, Germany.

RECEIVE LETTERS FROM FRIENDS IN CALIFORNIA

BAWDON—Mrs. Alsiga Babcock has received letters from her daughters who reside at Bellflower, California, and they are all safe at Long Beach. California, giving first hand information about the earthquake as they were in direct zone of the quake. Mrs. Babcock resides with her daughter, Mrs. Sidney Sharp on the Fourth Concession of Rawdon. The following are extracts from the letters. Bellflower and Long Beach are thirteen miles apart.

Mrs. Myrtle Young of 1173 Beverly, Bellflower, California, writes on March 13th, "We are all alive so far but the terrors are with us yet, another one is coming now while I write. We can hear them before they strike and it sounds like muffled thunder and when they hit it is just like a terrible bul we have to grin and bear it. We have tried very hard to get a radio or telegram message through but failed, and they will try as often but they tell us the stamp supply is running short.

We are all sleeping outdoors in tents and we are using all the woollen materials and heavy clothes we as the nights are so damp and chilly. Many cases of bronchitis and pneumonia from the exposure.

When the quake struck, our house it was five minutes to six p.m. I was cooking supper and standing over a roast of beef. It was boiling on the stove and I turned around to the cupboard and the dishes flew around me and nearly every dish broke. The hot gravy bounced on the floor and the children grabbed me and then I fell down in the hot gravy and slightly burned my leg from the knee to ankle. Just as I arose it threw me against and I hit the corner of the sink and hurt my hip and I have a black knee. I was the only one hurt and we are thankful it wasn't serious. Everything moved in the house except the piano. The floor tried to get the car out of the garage as it was jumping and another tremble started and the hurried outside and skinned her knee.

Our house is leaning east and the garage is leaning west and both are about ready to fall down. We have no water or gas as yet—they are feeding people free so we go up to the kitchen and eat.

"There aren't many houses in Long Beach or Bellflower that are left on their foundations. We have taken pictures of the damage done and hope to send them to you some day. A radio comes in now and then every day. A radio comes in the open. The one in the car in the garage and the chair as I write. We are very thankful we are alive. Will send more particulars next time."

Mrs. Frank Basemore, (nee Gertie Babcock) of Bellflower, writes on March 14th.

"We haven't had any severe trembles now for six hours and hope they soon cease. We are living in the open and are sleeping in a tent and the car and hope to come back to it all right. We have to boil our water twenty minutes before it is fit to use.

"The hospital and emergency beds are terribly crowded and the situation is very much worse than Long Beach is in need of help. Long Beach is under martial law. The gas was terrible. We have not again liked."

Mr. Frank Babcock is 1184 Bank Street, Long Beach, California. He writes on March 14th. "We are all O.K. after the earthquake. I am still at the bakery hauling bread from Long Beach to feed the hungry people. The gas is turned off and lots of people are practically living on bread and canned foods.

"We have been out to Bellflower and they are all well there. If you see this city it is hard to get back as the police are not allowing people from other towns in Long Beach unless they live here.

"Bellflower is a total wreck. Our house is pretty well shaken up and many of the walls cracked. We are staying with the Holland's at Long Beach.

"Several of the buildings are too far gone to be repaired and they are going to tear them down. We are still getting some shocks. The worst one was on Saturday at 5.30 a.m. and past now at 9.15 p.m. another could hit any minute. I feel I should do all I can to help as so many of the people have no homes. Stores are living in garages and there are out in the open and have made tents out of sheets and old sacks. Will write again later."

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Elliott spend the week-end with friends in Belleville.

Mrs. Ross Hoard spent Wednesday night and the Sunday School classes at Bethel United Church taught by Mrs. Elliott and Mrs. Hoard were very royally entertained.

Our friends gave Kenneth Hagerman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hagerman, a farewell party at Milton Hagerman's farewell party Monday evening. Mr. Henry Farrell was master of ceremonies and Mr. Elliott read a very appropriate address and the guests in attendance presented Kenneth with a lovely robe. A good program followed and a delicious lunch was also enjoyed.

Miss M. McKelvey of Belleville, spent the week-end at her home.

Fire broke out at the home of Mr. O. Lemaire, and has been under control since about 10.30. Fortunately it was extinguished with little difficulty and the damage done was slight.

An interesting programme was given at the A.Y.P.A. meeting on Tuesday evening in the Guild Rooms. After the opening exercises and business of the evening, conducted the President, Mr. C. D. Tweed, Miss Ruth Ellis read a booklet, District Forester in charge of Tweed, "Fire Protection." The address was illustrated with five reels of motion pictures, which were enjoyed by the members of the A.Y.P.A. and their friends. The first part "Forest Heritage" showed the value of forests to Canadians and the methods by which they are protected. The next picture "People" was also particularly interesting, showing the life of the brewer and how his hops are grown, how his beer is tested and how it has lost its fear of man. The third picture "Careless" showed the work to be carried on and how it could be done. The "Boy Scout Jamboree" and the "Camp Fire Girls" were also the theme of the next reel. The fifth and last reel was entitled "Wild Life" showing numerous series of young evergreens, plantations of trees, the method of planting, and the results obtained. The Perfect Type

By E. J. Hemingway

Crystal Harnett was in a peevish, petulant mood. She had spent the best part of the morning in the office interviewing applicants for the position she filled in Mr. Graham's gang. She had looked upon scores of men and had rejected all of them.

The rebuff was not the romantic kind that it might have been. She was the strongest and most important person in the profession. It was the part of her father—a feeble, half-witted, mentally powerful old man—bequeathed his daughter—his one and almost wrecked her last chance to happiness with the young man she loved.

Every actor on Broadway knew that this part would mean for the one selected a play it. Besides the record long run of the production it would bring the fortunate actor to the footlights before the very members and give him a chance to find for himself a valuable reputation.

For Crystal Harnett was without question the most successful actress on the stage. Her last play, "The Night Watch," had played to two crowded theatres for eighteen months. The piece could have run out the country for almost two years.

Knowing this, actors of every type had fought bitterly to win this part. Then they, too, had stood hungrily moving toward the sunset of Broadway's failures. Even the melodious youngsters who were unusually clever with make-up.

It was painfully hard for the world-heralded Crystal Harnett to turn them, for she knew how intensely hope beat in their breasts. But after every single applicant was tired of the search and would gladly have ended it by choosing one of the applicants blindfolded. But Crystal Harnett never worried in her choice of men. Instinctively she was the simple secret of her genius.

It was almost noon when Graham's secretary entered to announce the arrival of another applicant. Resigned to the apparent futility of the search, Graham ordered the next away, but Crystal Harnett, with a smile, intervened.

"He may be the very one we're looking for, Dick."

"You said that about all of the others."

"I might be right once," she answered.

It was a tall young man, suspiciously attractive, who came in.

"Stanley Kean," he introduced himself. "This is my first trip to New York. I've been working here and the footlights since my mother carried me on in her arms on Broadway, my shabby dressed.

He described at length the Western stock companies he had played with and the immense variety of parts he numbered in his repertoire. Crystal Harnett shook her head sadly, reluctantly.

"You're not the type," she said.

"Type," he repeated scornfully. "There's no such thing as type for a competent actor. I want a chance on Broadway, sir, shabby dressed. I'll rehearse for nothing if you'll only let me show you what I can do."

"Yes I insist on type," Crystal told him. "You are young and strong. There is the triumph of youth in your eyes, the joy of strength in your movements. The man I seek is old and tired. When he speaks and moves every action and syllable play the part. He has a streak of madness mixed with hypnotic genius that gives him a sense of terrible power in spite of physical weakness. I want an actor for that man."

Grant fallen, Stanley Kean was away.

In the afternoon Crystal returned to the task. Scores of actors filed by. There was one applicant, previously rejected, who appeared by his make-up. There was an old woman who might have been played with Edwin Booth and Richard Mansfield. There was a young man who admitted that he had never played on the stage.

Crystal was interested. In his appearance. His eyes were sullen and black-shot, and half-hidden by shaggy gray brows. His long, tangled hair was frosted with silver. His shoulders were stooped, slightly humbled. His voice was deep and resonant.

It was his manner that interested her. There was something in his quiet aspect she could not name, yet which at once attracted and frightened her. His reddened eyes held a cruel, hypnotic gleam akin to insanity, while his voice seemed to charm the listener. What a pity, she felt, that he was too old, for he was the perfect type.

Mark Graham dismissed him. He refused to go. Graham raised his voice. The man still refused.

He shrugged his shoulders with a gesture of guile and threat that made Crystal wonder whether she ought to be frightened or amused. But of one thing she was certain: that the strange creature personified the actor she was seeking for her play.

Graham, in his rough way, pushed the man toward the door. As he did so something fell from the man's hand. It was his tangled, gray hair—a wig!

The man, thus exposed, straightened himself and grinned. He pealed the false eyebrows off his forehead and, by loosening a band, removed the padding from his shoulders. Only his bloodshot eyes which had been artificially stained remained their fearsome aspect.

Crystal's lawsuit stood up with a joyful cry. She bounded forward and caught the man in a caressive, happy embrace, while Graham started in speechless amazement.

"Stanley Kean!" she laughed. "You win! You win!"

12 INCH SNOWFALL STRIKES AT OTTAWA

One of Heaviest Storms of Year Causes Tie-up in Some Services

Ottawa, March 23—(CP)—One of the heaviest storms of the season descended here this winter occurred in the last 24 hours. Early today more than a foot of snow had fallen, mostly heavy and wet. Street cars and automobiles had considerable difficulty making progress.

Railway officials reported all trains on time despite the heavy fall of snow, but telephone company officials stated that several long distance lines to Montreal and Toronto were out.

MAR. 23 - MR. AND MRS.- JOE DECIDES THAT MATRIMONY MIGHT BE WORSE.

TARZAN, AND THE GO DEN LION, No. 6

(Metropolitan Newspaper Service) By Edgar Rice Burroughs.

Many were the hours each day that Tarzan spent in training and educating the little, spotted ball — all playfulness now, but who one day would grow into a great savage beast of prey. When meat was added to the Golden Lion's diet, the ape man fed it in a way that brought grim smiles to his Waziri warriors. For, Tarzan had fashioned a dummy in the semblance of a man. The lion's meat was always fastened at the throat of this dummy. As a word from the ape-man, the lion would crouch. Tarzan would then point at the dummy and whisper the single word "kill!"

However hungry the lion would be, he learned never to move toward the meat until that single word was uttered by his master. Then with a rush and a savage growl he drove straight for the flesh. When he was little, Jad-bal-ja had difficulty at first in chumbering up the dummy. As he grew older and larger, a single leap would carry him to his goal. Down would go the dummy upon its back with the lion tearing at its throat. Months it took him to find an indicated object and bring it unharmed to Tarzan at the single word "fetch." Lady Greystoke was often an interested onlooker at the education of the Golden Lion. She had many misgivings at the wisdom of the ape-man's program.

"What can you do with such a brute after he is full grown?" she asked one day. "He bids fair to become a mighty Numa. Now he will be utterly fearless of men. Will he not then be doubly dangerous?" Tarzan smiled confidently. "He will never feel any fear of man or woman, either," he added teasingly. "That I know." Then came the time when Jad-bal-ja was taken into the jungle to test the ape-man's theories. One afternoon they set off across the plains Jad-bal-ja following the heels of Tarzan's horse. There were Jane, Korak, Tarzan and the Golden Lion. Four jungle hunters. And of the four Jad-bal-ja, the-lion was the least accomplished. At length they dismounted near a swale in which antelope were usually to be found. Warily they crawled through the brush. Scarce a leaf rustled in their passage. Below, they saw a grazing herd. Nearest them was an old buck. Tarzan pointed him out in some mysterious manner to Jad-bal-ja. "Fetch him," the ape-man whispered.

UNEMPLOYED INSURANCE IS DISCUSSED

Labor Minister Answers Questions Brought up in House

NO DETAILS

Relief to be Extended Another Year Says Government

Ottawa, March 23—(CP)—Unemployment insurance is receiving continued and careful study by several departments of the Dominion government, the House of Commons was told by Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Labor.

Closely questioned by opposition members as to the discussions on this topic at the recent inter-provincial conference Mr. Gordon said non-committals He said it had been agreed not to disclose the attitude taken by the different provinces.

The discussion took place yesterday just before the House passed the resolution, which permits the government to introduce a bill to extend the relief act for another year and to insert in it provisions for wider governmental powers.

Before any federal unemployment insurance system could be established, the Dominion would have to obtain certain powers now possessed by the provinces, said Mr. Gordon.

At the recent conference the provinces had declined to surrender those powers.

There was reason to hope an agreement could be arrived at in time after more complete information on all phases of the question had been gathered. No hard and fast plan of insurance had been laid before the conference as such a step would have precluded the possibility of discussion and consideration.

Without recorded division, the resolution was passed yesterday instructing the government to bring in the relief legislation, consuming a week or more of debate. The legislation, itself will be discussed next week.

At the recent Dominion-Provincial conference, said Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice the provinces declined to surrender their legal powers over insurance and were opposed to an amendment to the British North America Act to enable the Dominion to act alone.

Before any federal scheme could be established, the Dominion must have the power to compel employees and employers to contribute to the central fund—a power now vested in the provinces.

PROSECUTION CLOSES CASE

Defense Says Officer Went to Holland But Not to Sell Country

London, March 23.—(AP)—The prosecution closed its case this afternoon in the courtmartial of Lieutenant Norman Baillie-Stewart, young officer of the Seaforth Highlanders charged with communicating army secrets.

Norman Parker, defense counsel said the young officer journeyed to Holland last August to make a woman known as Maria Louise, who during formed the most discreditable insertion of taking advantage of her infatuation to obtain money from her."

Marie Louise is the young woman with whom Lieutenant Baillie-Stewart admitted, according to previous testimony, he had a liaison. "Baillie-Stewart was under the influence of Marie Louise," Parker said, he sent him £50, which the prosecution claimed was a payment for secrets.

Mr. Parker declared that Lieutenant Baillie-Stewart's last visit to Holland Marie Louise had hinted that in order to induce him to return to Germany in the spring he "must make payment would be made."

Marie Louise had told the prisoner that if he wished to continue with her it must be through Otto Wahlscar Obst, of Berlin—the man who had brought them together—the attorney continued.

The name of Otto Waldemar Obst has been mentioned in the courtmartial as the man reputed to have figured in the alleged communication of army information.

The prosecution has indicated its belief that Marie Louise was a mythical person invented by the prisoner to cover his alleged betrayal of army information.

EYES WATCH SUGAR-BUSH

South-west Wind For Sap Flow is Needed

Old Man Farmer stood on his door step at dawn Thursday morning, and sniffed appreciably at the cool crisp wind "that blew steadily from the southwest. He gazed at a sugar bush beyond where a six inch layer of still white snow met the sky.

The night had been cool and frosty and yet two little icicles hung from the barbed wire fence facing his house.

It was a perfect day for sap making, one of those days you often hear about, but seldom see.

Southwest wind just right. Snow on the ground, a warm sun in the sky, a frosty night the night before atmospheric conditions as near to perfection as possible.

Why the southwest wind should be so necessary was not explained, but Old Man Farmer knew it to be true. Proper sap making needs a southwest wind.

Old Farmer prophesies a short sugar season this year. There was the lack of snow and real cold weather during the past winter and not much warmth for good sap.

"BIG FIVE" TO SEND PROTEST

Cutting of Pensions by Government is Opposed

Ottawa, March 23—(CP)—While a series of protests from labor organizations across the Dominion trickles into government offices three representatives of the "Big Five" associated veterans organizations meet here today to discuss the government's proposal to suspend pension payments to disabled war veterans in the service of the Dominion government.

Criticism of the move has been general and particularly following the announcement in the budget speech Tuesday by Hon. Dr. H. Rogers, Minister of Pensions, that a gain called today's meeting and set out from Halifax for Ottawa.

Veterans' pensions are the "first thing that should be touched" in the drive for government economy, Sir Arthur Currie, warden commander of the Canadian Corps declared last night at Bowmanville Ont., where he delivered an address.

As yet, Sir Arthur said, he has seen no indication that all possible other steps towards economy had been taken.

Indicative of the views of veterans throughout Canada was the action taken last night by the Moose Jaw branch of the Canadian Legion. At a meeting in Winnipeg it passed a resolution opposing the contemplated action and wired Rt. Premier R. B. Bennett and C. H. Bowker, General Secretary of the Legion.

In New Brunswick some 35 local commands of the Legion sent protests to Ottawa.

PACIFIC PROBLEM

Withdrawal of U.S. From Pacific Pleasing to Japan

New York, March 24—(AP)—Yosuke Matsuoka, head of the Japanese delegation to the League of Nations, arrived in the United States today fellow delegates by saying and asserted that Japan was not "a vassal state to America or any other nation."

Matsuoka expressed that Japanese-American feeling might be improved if the United States would withdraw its fleet from the Pacific Ocean.

He said he did not know whether or not Japan intended to withdraw from the League of Nations, answer to a specific question, he declared that Japan had no intention of relinquishing the mandated islands. Neither or not it remained in the league.

Matsuoka arrived.

A crowd of Chinese were gathered in the street outside the pier as the Japanese delegation left the docks and his fellow delegates. They shouted epithets at him, asserted what they said was Matsuoka's intention to engage in a campaign of propaganda while in America.

A police guard about 100 uniformed officers and detectives had been assigned to the dock to prevent possible demonstrations. Yen Hsi Ngo Ho, a student, was held for questioning after police found he had a revolver with him. He disclaimed a pernali to carry the weapon.

Matsuoka, affable and smiling, received a reception aboard the Leviathan at Quarantine.

The first question was: "Is it true that you are to be Ambassador to the United States?"

"They make all sorts of speculations about me," he replied. He was asked if he planned to confer with President Roosevelt, and he replied:

"I would like to, but I don't think he is a busy busy man at this time and I don't like to intrude."

He was reminded when he walked out of the special session of the league assembly in Geneva when Japan was denounced, Dr. S. M. Bohan, Picton, Ontario, Canada. The other name is Dr. Hollington Tong, Canadian, who followed the Japanese delegation out of the session.

He drifted to discussion of the Manchurian situation.

"It is always very, very, very difficult," he said, "for people, such as the Japanese, to be thrown into the scene to understand actual conditions.

"We Japanese are poor propogandists, as is well known that is why we are misunderstood.

"We are not appealing to anyone. We are a sovereign state of America or any other country."

Historic Course in World

The Grand National calls for two circuits of a four-and-one-half mile course, 30 jumps, all but two of which must be negotiated twice. To win and to finish two of the most thrilling steeplechase courses in the world.

Belchers Brook, perhaps the most famous of the barriers, is a thorn hedge with a ditch on the take off and a natural brook on the far side, five feet, six feet wide and with a drop of six feet. Valentine's Brook, coming directly after the stone wall at turn fence, is similar to Becher's.

The open ditch calls for a leap of six feet over a ditch two feet deep before taking a three foot fence, then two inches and one three feet, nine inches wide. The water jump is 14 feet wide with a fence two feet, six inches high.

The course is said to be one of the toughest in the world. Dusty Fool, who won last year, fell at the field finishes. The jumps were numerous and many over the gruelling length gets many more.

The estimated ordinary revenue for the year has been placed at $53,333,000, a drop of $4,083,000 from last year's figure, while estimated ordinary payments are set at $53,-

Unemployment relief charges and debt charges account for the other two principal factors which contribute to the expected deficit, the Premier said. The annual debt instalment had been suspended, while the 1931 relief and four-fifths of last year's, totalling $18,246,000, will be charged to capital account. The direct relief expenditure, he said, would be maintained, and when 30 days loomed around the corner a further sum would be asked, which probably be inaugurated to take care of the deficit.

Portsmouth Duties Well

The budgeting committee, which for some months has been supervising expenditures, found that their duties in splendid fashion, the Premier said. They would continue the work this year. The cost of departmental operation has been slashed considerably by the committee, the ordinary expenditure being cut by $2,142,000 and the capital by $500,000, estimated between $10,000,000 and $14,000,000.

Mr. Henry declared there had been "a great deal of idle talk" about conducting public debates, and intended to convey the idea, he said that the present government was living the past nine years had been extravagant in its administration. In the nine years of the Ferguson and Drury governments the debt had increased to $281,000,000, which he said only $8,000,000 had been spent on new highways.

In comparison, the Premier said, the present administration, during the four years it had been in office, had increased the provincial public debt to $123,991,000, but had left a surplus of $14,000,000.

There is an adequate reserve for those who go on the hustings and talk of the extravagant administration of the past nine years, without a word as to other side of the picture where the money has gone," Mr. Henry said.

Debate Opens Tuesday

The debate on the budget will open next Tuesday afternoon, when T. W. Elliott (Bruce North) financial critic, will be the first speaker on the first speaker.

Many of the legislators returned to work with a busy programme confronting them. This morning, fish and game, municipal law and a number of committees on privileges, were scheduled to meet.

Noon the House will turn its attention to legislation.

The committee on privileges will deal with charges laid by the alleged libel of E. J. Murphy, Conservative member for Grenville-Dundas, against K.C. of Toronto, which it will definitely decided if Mr. Waldron is to be brought before the Bar of the Legislature.

Mr. Waldron alleged to have charged Mr. Murphy was paid to keep the peace between Conservatives and Liberals.

FRACTURES TWO RIBS IN FALL

SHANNONVILLE—The many friends of Mrs. Allan MacDonald regret to learn that she had the misfortune to fall from her back-door fracturing two ribs. All hope that a speedy recovery.

Miss Emily Dutton of Belleville, spent the week end with friends in Carrying Place, March 24—Another snowfall has come, not to last, and spring is here. And as usual the first day of spring has brought with it nothing more spring like than hopes for better weather in the future. Spring days are filled in with a downpour of rain, occasional hail, and later a heavy fall of snow, Snow flakes that seemed large enough to fill a bushel filled the air and added to the unpleasantness of the weather. The only day on which a day or two ago covered the roads and made driving a hazard it is gone, mostly melted away by the showers since. So this is spring.

In spite of an apparent lack of sympathy on the part of the weather people and others, Mr. Ford around the corner, for the chief subject of conversation among the young people is softball. A newspaper report that the Canadian Legion will enter a team in the league this year, the appointment of a dance in Consecon, sponsored by a softball club, and many various other similar items have made a change in the trend of the people's ideas. Mr. Gossip Cretney, one of the best judges of Victoria's land for the past year, is located in the neighborhood at present, and may play for the locals this season. This is the cheering news indeed and his services are bound to be welcomed.

Miss A. Pierson and Miss Greer spent the week end with friends in Belleville as the guests of Miss Elsie Flichels.

Services were held in the United Church on Quinte Circuit on Sunday last, but were conducted by Rev. Knox of Belleville in the absence of the indisposed Rev. Mr. Stevenson of Consecon, who is suffering an attack of influenza.

On Friday evening last Messrs. Harris and Ketcheson gave a social hour jolly dance, held at Sunset in the Parish Hall, and a very large crowds the Hall has seen in many an evening attended; and those who came enjoyed a most fine of fun were certainly not disappointed. The Hall was packed and filled the yard around while still others were content dancing. Round and square dancing, Charlie Reid, these were a few of the attractions.

It is interesting to note progress being made on the erection of Trenton's new factory, the Coulter-Downs textile plant, on the site of Frenzen's Park; and is doubly interesting and encouraging to see the lack of building activity everywhere. The work is progressing from the foundation at good speed, and those who travelled to Trenton over the week end saw the steel beams of the windows had been put into position.

Inspector A. A. Martin visited the local school last Wednesday afternoon.

Accounts of the Tuphy-Dorland nuptials now read very differently, bring into prominence the name of Frank Regan, counsel for Tuphy, Mr. Regan is a well known criminal lawyer, is not a stranger here, since he was once a resident of Trenton and frequently is seen in Belleville on legal business. His father is a prominent Orangeman.

JUSTIFIABLE DEFICIT SAYS THE PREMIER

Direct Relief Will be Continued And Loans Issued

IDLE TALK

Debate on Budget Will Open in House on Tuesday

Toronto, March 24—Ontario settled back today to study and digest the remaining details of the Provincial Budget, presented before a crowded house and packed galleries by Premier George Henry in the Legislature yesterday. It was the first time the Premier had acted in this capacity, a necessity occasioned by the illness of the Provincial Treasurer, Hon. E. A. Dunlop.

There is a keen particular interest to the taxpayer, as with one exception it makes no provision for new taxes. It does, however, include a means of augmenting the government revenue, in the form of an amendment to the Succession Duties Act, whereby a 10 per cent. estate would be added until economic conditions permit its removal.

Relief Over Two Millions

While the financial statement forecasts a deficit of $2,063,000, Premier Henry pointed out it is a justifiable deficit, for which I have no apologies. One million dollars of the deficit, he said, was there because the government gave consideration to farmers and did not press them to live up to their obligations.

The estimated ordinary revenue for the year has been placed at $53,333,000, a drop of $4,083,000 from last year's figure, while estimated ordinary payments are set at $53,-

Unemployment relief charges and debt charges account for the other two principal factors which contribute to the expected deficit, the Premier said. The annual debt instalment had been suspended, while the 1931 relief and four-fifths of last year's, totalling $18,246,000, will be charged to capital account. The direct relief expenditure, he said, would be maintained, and when 30 days loomed around the corner a further sum would be asked, which probably be inaugurated to take care of the deficit.

Portsmouth Duties Well

The budgeting committee, which for some months has been supervising expenditures, found that their duties in splendid fashion, the Premier said. They would continue the work this year. The cost of departmental operation has been slashed considerably by the committee, the ordinary expenditure being cut by $2,142,000 and the capital by $500,000, estimated between $10,000,000 and $14,000,000.

Mr. Henry declared there had been "a great deal of idle talk" about conducting public debates, and intended to convey the idea, he said that the present government was living the past nine years had been extravagant in its administration. In the nine years of the Ferguson and Drury governments the debt had increased to $281,000,000, which he said only $8,000,000 had been spent on new highways.

In comparison, the Premier said, the present administration, during the four years it had been in office, had increased the provincial public debt to $123,991,000, but had left a surplus of $14,000,000.

There is an adequate reserve for those who go on the hustings and talk of the extravagant administration of the past nine years, without a word as to other side of the picture where the money has gone," Mr. Henry said.

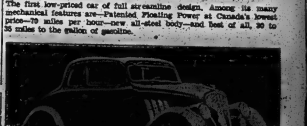
C. B. FARNHAM WINS PRIZE

Accountant Secures 223 Points Out of Possible 224 in Contest



Claude B. Farnham, accountant for J. T. Warren Co., sales and automobile dealer, was signally honored at the meeting of the General Motors held at the Royal York in Toronto last week, when he was presented with a large and comprehensive Marshall Case and for the highest standing among the accountants of the Toronto area. This case includes the Niagara Peninsula, Toronto, Northern Territory, and east to Kingston and which are 81 dealer's accountants. Mr. Farnham is Oshawa, supervise all accounting of the dealer's books and in 1932 offered valuable prizes to the accountant having included, prompt and well kept financial statements. The accountants handed themselves into a club called the General Motors Dealer's Accountants Club and the majority of the members entered the competition. Points were given on each book and financial item and those points any accountant being able to secure was set at 224 points. Farnham was only one point shy of having a perfect score, which is a remarkable record.

Members of the Toronto zone management were present at the banquet as well as Mr. Stevens, General Sales Manager, Business management manager for all Canada and A. H. Wilson, zone manager in the same branch of service, Mayor Fearman, representatives of the managers for his accomplishment and he also received the praise of his fellow accountants at the banquet.

STILL A BARBER

Barbers, at least some of those in the Ontario Association, want to be called "Gentlemen Hairdressers," but the idea of the name at Ottawa did not carry. Perhaps the barbers were afraid of being called by what some might think a feminine name.

After all the good old barber will be the good old barber still. Now there is a fine chap, the "Barber of Seville," what would he do if he came to sing here, and he found the name barber was abolished. "The Gentleman Hairdresser of Seville" would sound strange.

Why war on the word "barber." Its origin is good for it comes from barba, Latin, for beard. Of course the word gentleman is good; and hairdresser is good too, but both also come from the Latin, excepting the word hair which is Teutonic, of course.

Speaking seriously, it would look as if the barbers have no reason to fear. If people would not think they were gentlemen just the same even if they did not use the name gentlemen for their profession.

If the barbers and women hairdressers starting to call themselves lady barbers, they might object to the theft of their name, but surely they must resent the suggestion that women might think the men were invading their profession if they assumed the title of hairdresser.

FARM MEASURES

Legislation which has been passed since President Roosevelt came into office has added to the Democratic head, but what he has accomplished was probably less contentious than that which has just been put on the farm relief measure. It is expected that this will take a much longer time and that there will be spirited opposition as compared with the avalanche of support which he received on his banking measures.

In the long run President Roosevelt is going to be measured by the ultimate results. He came into office in a most difficult moment and troubles seem to have piled up since. But before his entry into office. He met them bravely and as a semi-dictator he has proven himself a man of the executive type. Fortunately he is powerful with an adequate following and his measures to relieve strain will have ample opportunity to be proven or disproven in actual trials.

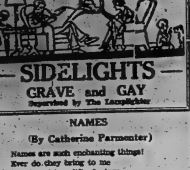
There is one great help behind him — thoroughly defeatist policies. Most of Mr. Hoover, and the feeling of readiness of most people to give him every chance to make good his stand.

Nor in Mr. Hoover's day was the United States so much the starting point of remedial measures as it is today. If the United States can help it the world's eye it must be pleased. One thing is certain, Mr. Roosevelt appears to be a man who welcomes the difficult times as a means of testing his strength. He is sincere, his speeches show him as trustful in his people and he seems to have the entire backing of the people.

GYROMAGNETISM

The possibility of magnetizing a piece of iron simply by rotating it was announced eighteen years ago by Prof. S. J. Barnett of the University of California.

This magnetism is not permanent, it seems, but disappears as soon as the iron comes at rest.



In an editorial, Engineering and Contracting (Chicago) suggests that this action may account for the earth's magnetism It recalls the developments of this theory:

"In 1876 Henry A. Rowland, recently graduated from Worcester Polytechnic Institute, made a remarkable discovery, namely that by rotating a disk charged with static electricity it became magnetic. Later A. P. Wills of thee University of California at Los Angeles, has made an even more remarkable discovery. In 1914 he found that the action of other magnetic substance, can be magnetized simply by setting it into rotation in a region which is originally entirely neutral magnetically.' In both the Rowland and the Barnett experiments, the magnetism ceases when the rotation ceases.

"In the cause of the magnetism, in the Rowland experiment is explained by the fact that either a proton or an electron in motion exhibits magnetic force. In the Barnett experiment the magnetic substances presumably display magnetic properties because their orbital electrons become oriented by the rotation, just as they became oriented in presence of the magnet. Professor Barnett uses the analogy of the gyroscope to explain how this orientation is effected. His articles in The Physical Review, are particularly a lecture delivered before the University of California in 1928 and revised in 1930, should be read by those who are interested in the details of his great discovery. We call it great not because of practical results that have as yet followed the discovery, but because of the flood of light that it throws upon certain phenomena.

"The earth's core is probably iron. It is rotating rapidly. Hence, by the Barnett principle it must be a magnet. A century ago Faraday showed that a vast number of substances are at least slightly magnetic. He found oxygen to be the most magnetic of all the common gases. Hence, by the Barnett principle, our atmosphere is a magnet.

"By the same principle we may safely infer that the sun, the stars, and all axially rotating planets are magnets. Hale has proved that the sun is a magnet. Even the orbital motion of a planet that contains magnetic material converts it into a magnet."

Brown, vice-president and general manager of the Moore of Canada, who predicted that the next twenty-five years would see the most radical changes yet made in motor car manufacture. So radical, or so different is the motor car of the future now taking form in the minds of motor car engineers, that if it was shown to us today no one would buy it, it said. INTELLECT IN CONTROL OVER EMOTION LIFE

Freedom of Emotional Desires May Lead to Disaster

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., PH.D., Fellow in Authority on Health And Hygiene

Emotions are one thing; intellect another. At least that is the way psychologists classify our feelings and thoughts which are all, to be sure, the products of functioning of a single organ, the brain.

Why are they so classified? Because, despite the fact that both emotions and intellectual processes appear as the activity of nerves in one organ, these two general types of mind activity are so often antagonistic to one another.

This becomes clear at once when we stop to consider the expression of anger, one of the strongest as well as most primitive states of feeling we possess. Should any individual allow his anger to govern whether justified or not—if, in other words, he did not make his reasoning hold his anger back so to speak—well, the likelihood is we would get by with it for a moment in a co-operative social group at all. Soon we would behave like the lower animals, and possibly in the end we would annihilate each other.

But intellect is there to behave like the rescue as a guide for the emotions. Not only are the intellectual faculties, but those concerned with logical memory, reasoning, comparison and the like, step in to dictate to our feelings when and how much they shall express themselves.

So we find, for instance, that the well-adjusted individual "thinks before" words, who thinks and listens to the counsel of his intellect. And the intellect—does not allow her first love judgment to be the last word. She wants to know more about her man before she is willing to allow her round heart to run away with her emotions. Experience, as bound up in her memory, tells her that she does her training and general education, and that intellect—which is the part of the intellect—which truly might be summarized as "reaction"—is worth following.

Nevertheless, right here is the trouble; Too many women, and men as well, do not have sufficient self-control in these respects. Not that they should be "cold blooded;" On the contrary, their intellectual processes function perfectly, only their emotions are too overwhelming them.

Part of this is because no two individuals are born alike, so far as the emotional pattern or both character make-up is concerned. Some of us have powerful, dynamic emotions which are quantitatively less emotion. Part of the fault lies in our education, which has overlooked the fact that we have been spoiled, or not allowed to have our own way too much.

But whatever the cause, it can and should be remedied. To allow our emotional desires to sweep us into foolish acts, to create unhappiness and failure if not, indeed, guilty conscience, is, at the last analysis, life is give and take; appreciate each other's fellow human; we cannot and dare not, except at our peril, ride rough-shod over the minds, privileges and feelings of those identical emotions in others, which we so expect to receive full expression in ourselves.

Too much repression of our feelings is also bad. Here again reasoning, the highest psychological gift and it is especially interesting to note in this connection that the two are also closely related, is our guide. Be more expert we become in the art of living, we become just enough free play—and no more.

Stomach trouble, dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, gas, sour stomach, constipation, etc., are caused nine times in ten by chronic acid stomach. Don't take drastic, unhealthy, hydrochloric acid destroying medicines in high-priced drug stores. MAIN STREET
Ramblings

A NEW ONE—

The latest variety of "public enemies" has been found. Several persons have been getting quite in this district for the past week or so, and farmers are getting a bit leary with the new "Rover Boy burglars". One farmer near Canniffton in particular has been the chief sufferer. For weeks now he has been waiting to commence the business of tapping the trees in his sugar bush. Each time he has essayed to do so, he has found that some one had sneaked in ahead of him, tapped all the trees, collected all the sap, and then disappeared, leaving the grove as empty and as dry as the well known bone.

ONE ON THE HOUSE—

A little yarn from the Brighton Ensign, our near neighbor, has been passed around the town in barber or local dailies and weeklies. We hereby claim the liberty of reprinting it in full.

"Who were the two Smithfield gentlemen who visited Ottawa lately, and while there attended a sitting of Parliament? One of the gentlemen pulled off a healthy snore while a speaker had the floor. The house was still, you could hear a pin drop when he sneezed. Unfortunately, during the "rain" process of eschewing, his store teeth were ejected from his mouth, and his glandular "Ah-choo" and his stillness everyone heard him, mem. bers and visitors, and a loud roar of laughter—everyone joined in. Ottawa Journal."

COURTING LIZZIE—

Old timers decry the passing of old time customs. They did do things in a different fashion in those days, we must admit. For example—

"It was raining—it had been raining for hours—yet the young man remained there a round the garden gate, heedless of his dripping clothes. It was Sunday night, and the young man came to the door, and indignantly demanded to know what he wanted.

"I've come a courtin' your daughter," replied the young man sheepishly, with wild hopes that he would be asked inside.

"Courtin' Lizzie, eh!" said the woman. "Then you'd better run away and save yourself! I My Lizzie is not going to marry a man who hasn't got brains enough to come in the door and ask for her. Why when her father came after me he climbed the back wall, strangled the bulldog and knocked the old man down. Then he grabbed hold of my hand and pushed the ring on, and told me that there were to be called the next Sunday. That's the sort of a husband I want for my girl—not a shivering idiot who has not enough sense to come in out of the rain!"

A NEW START

By Elizabeth S. Mackay

The funeral procession moved slowly over the wet, slippery streets of Cologne, headed toward the cemetery beyond the western limits of the city. A light drizzle fell, almost indistinguishable in the late afternoon pall of fog and smoke, mingled with an occasional snow flight shimmered clearly.

Within the carriage the hearse set the widow. The dead man's sister, made her, her black clothes and head sympathetically, but said nothing. Now and then she turned to the widow, but it was impossible to tell whether or not the latter wept behind her thick veil and the "Schrobel" she held pressed against her mouth.

The widow was thinking her own thoughts, the thought of the long string of cars following behind...relatives, friends, business associates, her dead husband's partner and the latter's wife. She wondered how long it would be before Conrad's partner would learn the true conditions of his business.....not for months, George had assured her only a few days ago. The question of wealth had been completed but recently.

Poor George! Ten years of hard work, then this..... this failure! The thought brought a sudden blur to her eyes, and she wiped them away. Her sister-in-law pressed her arm in sympathy, but refused to resist the impulse to jerk away. She didn't mind Conrad's sister. She only wished she could tell her how little she needed her condolences. Then the thing would shock Ethel, the rest of the relatives, those of George's wife's own kin curled under the concealing handkerchief, and she turned toward the window.

Ethel would think that she would have feared George's death, but George...that her expected child should have come into the world blighted by failure and want. She'd gone almost crazy thinking about it when George told her that he'd been robbed by his wild speculations with other people's money, had even the thought of his life insurance...petty business policies, and the plush had followed.

It had worked so smoothly, too, almost as if predestined to success, the epidemic of influenza...George's partner had died suddenly of pneumonia...the easy-going old family doctor who was also a friend followed the next day. He was so much broken up over the latter's death she had telephoned him about George's death that he never for a moment suspected. "Heart failure and heart failure" read the death certificates, and the old family doctor was laid up with an attack of "grippe."

No one would ever suspect. She had loved George so much all during the ten years of their married life! It was strange how the wild extravagance that had brought them together continued to bind her more closely to him after his death. Even now.....

The funeral arrangements had been the most difficult, but she had gone over to the west side and bought a cheap coffin, without asking shop. The proprietor had been sympathetic, and had given her money which she paid in advance for a cheap shroud as well. She seemed to think it strange that she didn't want to see the corpse into the coffin—but then when he was brought it yesterday, but he accepted without question her statement that she wanted her husband to be in bed, just as he would be when he died, for the funeral. He looked so natural, just as if he were asleep, she had explained soothingly.

No one had been permitted to see George in his coffin, the undertaker under flowers, except his sister and his partner's wife, to whom she had explained that she had hardly gotten a last glimpse of him in the hurrying candlelight. Then the widow's sudden hysterical outburst her weep ing and sobbing, had ended in a faint.

When the undertaker and his assistant had arrived an hour or so later to fasten the coffin lid, they had found it closed and the coffin ready for removal. Ethel was sitting quietly in the darkened room.

The jolting of the cars turned her thoughts. The entrance brought the widow back to her surroundings. She looked around at the car corner, and the mourners slowly filtered around the newly dug grave. The driest had increased to a cold rain. Tears enough for anyone, she thought, and smiled grimly.
